me @@ non-natives esp. white people acting like the water protectors are already dead when listen up binch this fight has been going on for over five hundred years and you've only been in it in, what? five? 2? how old is your tumblr account?

Cuz buckle up, we're fighting, and this is the meme i meant to post before all the stuff about five hundred years of resistance anyways fuck trumasdfa #noDAPL

It's important that donations are made to a variety of these campaigns because while all are in the general area of the campsite and do communicate, the different campaigns don't always or can't always share different resources. Grab a group of friends, make strips of paper, and shuffle to make donations.

It has come to my attention that this regained popularity in recent weeks. As the author, I'm deeply humbled by the support in the form of reblogs and likes even despite the crass language. I'm not Lakota or from the areas of these tribes. I'm from a Pueblo in New Mexico (shout-out to the Pueblo camp at standing Rock!) And Navajo Nation. I made this post at s tumultuous time in my life when I had accrued so much capital and privilege in the white man's world. Back when these were working links, I was a community organizer that went into a post traumatic stress disorder episode while this post was getting popular 2 years ago when Standing Rock was still at camp. I ask folks to reblog this out of respect to the many people and messages passed that allows for campaigns like these to exist. I'll never know how much was raised but know that y'all were a part of something huge and important. That two years is not a long time and progress is like watching grass grow.

[ID: A 6-panel, black and white comic. The panels are as follows:

1. The text “There is only one pronoun in Cantonese” next to that pronoun, 佢, written in grid paper.

2. White text against black. It reads, “Not neutral as in a statement. Neutral as in ‘never considered’“

3. A child on the ground, laying on their stomach with a pen in hand, in front of the paper with 佢 on it. Text next to them reads, “I think that’s part of why I didn’t consider gender much as a kid”

4. Someone wearing a qipao and two braids, drawn from the neck down. They put a hand up in a “stop” gesture at someone else’s hand, which reaches towards them from offscreen. Text reads, “But like the Mandarin 他 / the white people came / split 女 from 人”

5. Text reading “Split into 他 她” The two pronouns are written so that they form the labels of bathroom doors.

6. A person gestures forward. Blood drips from their mouth and the center of their palm. Text reads, “I gender myself in a tongue that is not my own / and taste the bitterness of colonization”

Real talk though I got a dentist appointment May 5th. I need $3700 to get my teeth fixed. I am begging at this point but I can not look like this. I have no idea how to make myself more visible I would be so thankful if this would get funds to fix my busted grill. I feel so damn ugly right now I cant take it. Please boost this if you see this, reblog, copy the link and share on your twitter or facebook. Please, even a $1.00 help. Anything helps.

I am honestly so embarrassed and ashamed of myself right now asking, but at this point i'm more ashamed looking like I do.

I tried crowdfunding before but gave up, but now i'm determined just look at this

Gandalf the Grey, and rest from journeys. For I am Saruman the Wise, Saruman Ring-maker, Saruman of Many Colours!"
'I looked then and saw that his robes, which had seemed white, were not so, but were woven of all colours, and if he moved they shimmered and changed hue so that the eye was bewildered.

'"I liked white better," I said.

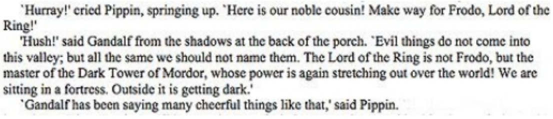
Am I the only person who thought this was really fucking funny

eleemosynecdoche Follow

A lot of the really funny moments in Lord of the Rings come from Tolkien playing with language like this, where we have relatively formal, archaic, "high" language responded to with informal, modern, "low" language.

kaaatebishop

another hilarious example:



'Hurray!' cried Pippin, springing up. 'Here is our noble cousin! Make way for Frodo, Lord of the Ring!'
'Hush!' said Gandalf from the shadows at the back of the porch. 'Evil things do not come into this valley; but all the same we should not name them. The Lord of the Ring is not Frodo, but the master of the Dark Tower of Mordor, whose power is again stretching out over the world! We are sitting in a fortress. Outside it is getting dark.'
'Gandalf has been saying many cheerful things like that,' said Pippin.

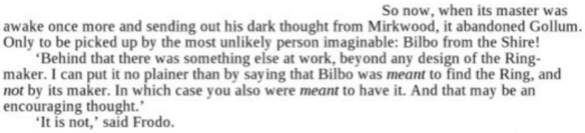
my absolute favorite example of tolkien switching registers in this way is



So now, when its master was awake once more and sending out his dark thought from Mirkwood, it abandoned Gollum. Only to be picked up by the most unlikely person imaginable: Bilbo from the Shire!
'Behind that there was something else at work, beyond any design of the Ring-maker. I can put it no plainer than by saying that Bilbo was meant to find the Ring, and not by its maker. In which case you also were meant to have it. And that may be an encouraging thought.'
'It is not,' said Frodo.

I miss the old days of youtube DIY/how-to videos. You wanted to know how a kreg jig worked? Best way to fix a microwave door that wouldn't shut? How to install a CPU fan? Then get ready for a shaky video where everything is done with one hand while someone who hasn't prepped at all tries to hamfist their way through. It was quick and to the point.

Now everything's a production, with logos and music and I feel like I'm watching late 90's/early aughts infomercials. I miss the old days where each video was like an old post-it note with scrawled information, or a warning left in a poorly lit dungeon about the spiderwasp nest in the next chamber.

skadisprawl Follow

There is nothing better than finding a how-to video filmed in the wrong aspect ratio by an older person who clearly has no idea where the camera on their phone is. That's how you know you found the real shit.

Absolutely. They're here to help, not to get an endorsement, views, or clout.

everyone should read the manga this is based on! the protagonist is a 40 year old Shiro, a gay lawyer who is somewhat neurotic and is not used to society being increasingly accepting of gay people since he's been in the closet for so long. Introverted Shiro is held in contrast to his boyfriend Kenji, who is out and proud and a social butterfly. The story is a slow paced character study on aging gay couples and how being queer is perceived by society. We get the perspectives of the gay couple, their families, their friends and their co-workers.

btw this line in the manga was "is being gay a joke to you??"

the fact that people actually pay for all these different shitty streaming services and i keep hearing shit like “oh they’re gonna have [movie from like 2005] on Disney+ so guess I’ll suck some capitalist dick!” ……..piracy is RIGHT THERE either use a pirate site or stop complaining about how expensive it is to give money to 15 different leeches so you can watch all your favourite movies (if you’re lucky and they have them which they often don’t) when you could just hit up fucking Google and watch it for free

mwagneto Follow

i literally never paid to watch a movie or show in my life and here’s how

- gowatchseries (i prefer this one)
- hdmo
- kimcartoon
- primewire - not a hosting site but instead a site that collects every available link so if you can’t find something on other sites, this will almost certainly have a link

you can find basically everything on the first two, on the off chance you can’t, try primewire. kimcartoon only has cartoons (duh) but it has literally every cartoon as far as i can tell. the last thing you need is thirty different greedy awful streaming sites who think password sharing is theft when these sites are right here for free

otterandterrier Follow

openload.watch also has EVERYTHING and with subtitles in many languages!

and for spanish-speakers, poseidonhd.co is also good, although you’re probably going to need a good pop-up blocker (ublock origin) here's some more multi-media stuff. happy pirating + make sure to use a vpn/malwarebytes/adblock.

in general? here's the eye. public database for anything your heart desires. mainly roms though.

if you want to stream anime, twist.moe is a spectacular site. for manga, you can use mangadex.

library genesis and sci-hub are good for reading, and sci-hub is dedicated to, you guessed it, scientific articles.

123tv has live televison.

for game cracks, roms, etc. here's r/crackwatch, vimm's lair which is mostly retro stuff, steam underground, and fitgirl repacks.

ytmp3 is a website that converts youtube videos to mp3 or mp4, excellent for free music.

I should clarify only about 1/3 of these people are under tents or something. Everyone else is just getting wet. There's a lady wrapped up with her coat over her head.

Everyone just wants out so bad.

1 USD = 75.22 Indian rupees

1 euro = 90.99 Indian rupees

1 pound = 104.40 Indian rupees

Even a small amount of 5 or 7 or 10 of foreign currency will help a lot. Our government has essentially abandoned us. People have turned to social media for help. WhatsApp groups and DMs on twitter/insta is where we find help. Our helpline is a Google doc. Situation is so dire that hospitals are discharging patients due to lack of oxygen. Every night the same story, oxygen running out in hospitals, citizens running around to somehow arrange for oxygen with minutes to spare. Last night, we had manged to get oxygen to a hospital with 14min to spare.

What Can Comic Book Heroes Teach Us About Black History?

A yearlong Narrative Projects series offers a fresh perspective on Black history, looking beyond the familiar lessons you may have...

NYTIMES.COM

Before the office emptied and Times journalists retreated to their homes with their laptops, Veronica Chambers, editor of The New York Times's Narrative Projects team, often found herself bumping into George Gene Gustines to chat about comics, a topic he has covered for The Times since 2002.

"There's a fair number of comic book fans in the office," Mr. Gustines said, "but she's definitely passionate."

It was that same zeal for the characters and story lines in the pages of Marvel, DC Comics and other publishers that inspired the latest package of stories for Black History, Continued, a yearlong Narrative Projects series that is examining pivotal moments and transformative figures in Black culture.

In order for the European Commission to read these proposals this initiative needs a lot more people signing that it has now, so every person counts.

For such an initiative to be considered by the EU-comission, it needs to reach at least 1 Million signatures + a certain threshold in at least 7 different member states. So far, only Belgium has met this second criterium. (As of 26th of April 2021)

There are still 839.639 signatures needed in total and the countries closest to reaching the threshold next are:

So, for years, people have asked me for advice on how to write disabled characters, and I've always faltered due to a combination of imposter syndrome and the thought, 'I don't know how to write your disabled characters; I only know how to write my disabled characters'. But, truth be told, I do have some advice, so…here's some advice:

Tips On Writing Disabled Characters

By A Wheelchair-Using Author Who's Involved In Disability Studies / Advocacy But Recognizes That She's Just One Voice So Don't Take This Post As A Word Of God And Listen To Other Disabled People Too.

(This is aimed at nondisabled authors, because disabled authors have their own rules; if you're a nondisabled author and you think that's unfair, you're probably not ready to write disabled characters)

1.) Here, have some academic literature, which features the 11 negative stereotypes of disabled characters, along with some additional tips. ("That article's long!" It's worth it.)

2.) Why are you writing this disabled character? Why are they disabled? Make sure you're not being tokenistic. Are you trying your best to show genuine representation? Constantly reflect.

3.) Are you writing a disabled character or are you writing a disabled character? Put simply: Take out the disability. What's left of your character? Their personality, their wants, their favorite foods, etc. Disabled people are people, so your disabled characters should be people, too. Give them an identity outside their disability.

4.) Who's your disabled character trying to inspire? Disabled or nondisabled readers? Aim for the former. Note: "What? My character's not there to inspire anyone" is an absolutely valid response.

5.) Does your disabled character need to be oppressed? Mine do. All of my books are about disabled characters fighting ableism / disablism, whether systemic, interpersonal, internal, etc. I consciously made that choice, because I want to write those types of stories. That said, it's perfectly valid to have, say, an autistic, crutch-using, pirate captain, whose disability is never questioned by the crew or their enemies. In fact, I daresay those stories are needed, just as much as stories about oppression are needed.

6.) On that note, suspension of disbelief is a tricky thing. Do you want your portrayal of disability to be extremely realistic or do you want to take some liberties? This depends on the genre and tone of your story. Jonah can only do what an average real-life wheelchair-user can do. Minnie can pull a sword from the scabbard that's impossibly-situated next to her armrest. Frankie's going to have a wheelchair-mech. My point is that certain genres lend themselves to certain realisms. Sometimes, it's nice to have disabled characters doing impossible things because it's Fun. Sometimes, it's nice to have a grounded, realistic, portrayal.

7.) Magic. Superpowers. Let's talk about them. Briefly. They should always be accommodations for your disabled characters. They should never cure them. Minnie has started using her magic to create ramps and elevators. Juniper telekinetically does similar things. In Avatar, Toph's seismic sense is an adaptation with its own limitations. She can't just magically see, like every other character. Adapt. Don't cure.

8.) Don't cure. Seriously, don't cure. "But-" Nope. "I-" Nah. "You said this post shouldn't be Word of God." I say a lot of things. I'm saying this, now: Don't cure your disabled characters. Put bluntly: ability is not a reward. By curing your disabled characters, often as a reward for their story-long perseverance, you're saying two things: 1.) Life is better when you're nondisabled. 2.) Real-life disabled people don't have the perseverance, strength, etc. to cure themselves. | The trope is dripping with eugenics-based propaganda. Do. Not. Cure. This rule might not apply to disabled authors. Speaking of…

9.) Be really careful when you're trying to write the personal narrative of a disabled character (i/e: a story that's all about a character's perception of their disability). When I say 'careful', I mean 'careful'. You could potentially piss off millions of people and cause genuine harm if you try to tell a story that's not yours to tell. "But it's my book!" But it might not be your story to tell. Me Before You wasn't just offensive to so many disabled people because the main character wanted to end his life; it was offensive because a nondisabled author who didn't know, let alone listen to, disabled people had written the story. It wasn't her story to tell. There are times when disabled authors get to tell disabled people's stories. You need to understand that. You need. To be. Careful.

10.) Listen to disabled people. Not just me. Every disabled person who talks to you. Listen to them. That said, while most people hated Me Before You, some people genuinely loved it. Opinions differ, is what I'm getting at. Just because one disabled person likes / dislikes your story, that doesn't mean the other nine hundred million will. But you need to listen. And if a majority of disabled people hate your creation, you need to do better. Don't be Sia. Don't be Sia. Listen to me, and I cannot emphasize this enough. Don't. Be. Sia.

11.) Mind the terms. Throughout this whole post, I've been saying "disabled people". Some would say, "people with disabilities". That is valid. Some would say "people with different-abilities". That is not valid. I can't get into the deep complexities of disability-language, so do your research. For god's sake, do your research.

12.) Mind the verbs. I'm forever amused by the fact that a sins-tallying Youtuber wrote a book where the blind character "looked over there". It's not offensive, per se; it's just a disconnect, you know?

13.) If your disabled character can't be put to an AMV of Fight Song or This Is Me, did you really write a disabled character at all?

"You can't use that word, it's a slur!"

That's not how it works, not really. You're thinking of an insult.

But there's a very big difference between an insult and a slur. With an insult, the derogatory thing is the label itself. With a slur, the derogatory thing is the thing it's describing. The attack doesn't come from the word "queer," it comes from the insinuation that the target is like us.

That's why the specific words don't matter - any label we choose will become a slur, simply because that label describes us. "Gay" and "Lesbian" were fighting words in the halls of my high school, because it was queerness that was looked down on, not words. To those who would wield it as a weapon, it's the connection to us that makes the thing disgusting, not the term itself.

By reducing the label to only ever an insult, you're confirming that they're right. That being this way is something to be ashamed of or repulsed by. Why do their work for them?

patroklos-mlm Follow

"One night, I was getting ready to close, and this old man comes in. He had to be in his 60s or 70s. Nice suit, good cologne, walking with a cane. Just a good-looking old man. Very nice. And he's looking at the thigh highs. I said, 'Can I help you find something?' 'Well, I didn't know these were as pricey as they were. But I'd like to get a pair.' 'How much money do you have?' 'Five bucks.' 'Alright, pick out whatever thigh highs you want. I'll give 'em to you for $5.' We ended up talking for about an hour. He said, 'You know these are for me?' 'I figured that.' He said, 'Back in my day, that wasn't allowed. You didn't tell anybody. I feel like a woman. I always have.' A lot of transgender teens are very open now. But to see this 60- or 70-year-old man talk about it, it broke my heart. I said, 'Times are different. I'm not looking at you funny. If you get on the Internet, I guarantee you can find a support group and meet somebody like you that's your own age, younger, whatever, and surround yourself with the same type of people. There's nothing wrong with that.' As he left, I said, 'See ya again sometime.' Well, about five months later, here comes in this older woman. Long, beautiful dress. Nice perfume. Beautiful makeup done. And walking with a cane. She said, 'Do you remember me?' I got goose bumps. She looked so classy. She said she was on her way to a group where she was getting together with some people the same as her, and she just wanted to say, 'Hi.' I broke down in tears when she left because, at her age, she probably only has so many years left. She's going to live the last part of her years out being how she wants to be."

So I have read several people complaining that they can't be expected to know the "unwritten rules" of fandom. So here's what I wish people knew:

Fanfiction is fiction.

Fictional people are not real.

Fictional people do not have rights.

Fictional people cannot be abused.

Reading or writing about something does not mean the desire to do or support it in the real world.

If I find art upsetting/triggering/disgusting/outraging/unpleasant/squicky/distressing/offensive, it is on me not to read it, not the creators and hosts to remove it.

Curate your own experience. The back buttons exist for a reason.

If you don't trust yourself to do that, get someone you trust to do it for you.

Fandom is an adult space. Adults create and own and host fandom spaces. If minors want to participate, then the onus is on them and their parents/guardians/trusted adults to ensure they participate appropriately, not on strange adults to stop being adults.

You often don't know the assault status or mental health status or neurotype or race or nationality or religion or gender or sexuality or age of a creator or consumer, and they do not have to disclose to you to justify their fantasy.

AO3 is not a safe space. It is not intended to be a safe space. Proceed accordingly.

Just because you don't like something or find it offensive doesn't mean it is a "problem" that "has to be dealt with".

Most characters in anime are not white.

There is no onus on you to reblog or share anything.

Everyone makes mistakes in fandom and is less than their best self sometimes.

Persistent pseudonyms encourage long term relationships.

Ship wars are stupid.

Someone else enjoying things does not impact on your own enjoyment of other things.

Tagging and warning is a courtesy, not a requirement. Assume any fic might contain untagged content.

Rating is an imprecise art, not a science.

Don't hassle IP creators.

Most people who are in fandom are hoping to make connections based on a shared passion.

Trying to profit from transformative fanworks puts us all at risk.

No one is obligated to share your head canon or fanon.

Being kind rarely fails to pay off.

It is okay to block and remove people who make your experience unpleasant. You don't have to placate them. (Learn from my mistakes).

Britpicking is a good thing.

You don't have to justify why you like a canon/pairing/trope/kink. Sometimes navel gazing is fun, but you don't have an obligation to explain yourself, especially to strangers. I share the overwhelming desire to refute an unfair accusation, but the people accusing you are rarely doing so in good faith, so you're batting a losing wicket.

I'm not your Mum. (Well, okay, a very few of you can call me Mum or Mom, but if you are one of them you already know who you are ❤️)

If you aren't mature enough to take responsibility for your online experiences, you aren't mature enough to be in fandom spaces.

They arrested medics tonight. Not one ambulance has been called to help the injured. As an Army medic, this is a fucking outrage to me. Medics are not on a side. They protect all life. Yes, all.

They actually uphold their oaths.

I'm sickened by this. It's unacceptable. They save lives in our community. Our community medics and first aid providers are all front line workers and come out to make sure anyone injured gets treatment.

What reason is there to justify this? How much more does this state think that we can all take?

All the love and respect to our frontline medics. Support them.

There's a church in Brooklyn Center that was harboring people hurt by police violence during the #DaunteWright protests, and this was how the cops responded.

Police dispersed a protest shortly into the night, then forced all journalists to surrender and consent to photographs of their faces, credentials, and IDs. Police also arrested marked medics for being present.

A local church opened to injured protestors the night before, and dozens of police responded by surrounding the church the following day.

#how do i explain to people that you can't 'betray' your enemies? #betrayal by definition requires a trust relationship#you can't be disloyal to someone when there's no expectation of loyalty to begin with#what is utterly hilarious about this#is that several of these examples demonstrate that loki IS loyal#being 'loyal' to thanos or malekith or laufey or the grandmaster#would by definition require him to be DISLOYAL to his loved ones#it would require him to sacrifice thor asgard etc for the sake of his own survival#which means that he literally cannot win#no matter what he does he will be accused of betraying SOMEONE#utterly ridiculous#now show me the chart of all the times loki has been betrayed by someone else please#let's compare and contrast#oh no i'm sorry#'villains' don't get betrayed right?#they merely get what's coming to them (tags via @nikkoliferous)

These tags are on point. This list reads like Mobius saw all our meta about how dumb his "you've stabbed people 50 times" comment was and got salty and tried to defend himself…despite having 0 evidence on his side.

I am screaming. This is just. Absolutely wild. These examples are so absurd. I can't even. Let's go through them shall we? Actually first a little reminder that tricking someone is not the same as betraying them. Prior to the invasion at Normandy during WWII the Allies used a deception campaign called Operation Fortitude to convince the Germans the invasion would take place at Calais. Since the two sides were enemies this was a TRICK not a betrayal.

Ok. Now let's look at these frankly laughable examples. (Seriously. This feels like something Fox News would put together to defend some patently false lie).

1) He stabbed Thor when they were 8, which is incredibly young by human standards. Never mind Asgardian standards. Also the Asgardians are far more physically durable than humans. Thor recounts this as an amusing story and part of the humor in the scene derives from the fact that Thor just mentions this in passing and doesn't seem to view it as shocking or upsetting. Loki and Thor both smile at the memory. Thor was obviously unharmed and he seems to view it as an amusing story of Loki being mischievous, rather than a moment of serious betrayal. And it doesn't seem to have damaged their relationship as in the beginning of Thor 2011 Thor seems to take Loki's loyalty for granted. He tries to convince the others to come with him to Jotunheim but takes it as a given that Loki will join him.

2) Thanos canonically tortured and mind controlled Loki. He is Loki's enemy, not someone he freely pledged himself to the first time. Then the second time he pledges loyalty as a ploy to try to save the life of his brother and his people. This was a trick used to try to destroy a very dangerous enemy. Not a betrayal.

3) Loki and Thor are fighting against each other at this point. Also Thor does not think he successfully convinced Loki to stop the invasion because Loki never agrees. Thor asks him to stop but Loki won't do it. (Also remember at this point Loki is under the influence of mind control). He stabs Thor WHILE FIGHTING HIM. This is not a betrayal.

4) Loki and Odin are enemies by the time Loki banishes Odin. Despite all Loki has suffered at Odin's hands he doesn't kill him. Odin has disavowed Loki and would have returned him to an empty cell for all eternity if he had the chance.

5) I suppose this technically counts as a betrayal though it's kind of a stupid scene that doesn't make sense narratively especially since Loki says he's already out of favor. But ok I'll give them this one (even though the only explanation that makes sense for why Loki would do this is that he is afraid Thor will be killed by Hela if he leaves and is trying to protect them).

6) Again. Malekith is an ENEMY Loki and Thor are fighting. Loki does not betray Malekith. He tricks him by pretending to betray Thor but actually staying loyal.

7) Manipulating Thor before the coronation definitely counts as a betrayal of Thor's trust. HOWEVER Loki's reason for doing this is not self serving. It is born out of his loyalty to Asgard and his desire to keep a dangerous warmonger off the throne. This is Thor's exact motivation in Thor: Ragnarok when he fights Hela. Also remember Loki doesn't want to take the throne from Thor, just delay his ascension until he has grown as a person.

8) This is a lie and a betrayal of trust certainly. However at this point Loki is having a breakdown due to having himself been betrayed - despite having become King legitimately everyone in Asgard is plotting against him and he's also learned that his family lied to him his entire life and his whole identity and sense of self have been thrown into disarray. Also he could easily have killed Thor here if he wanted to but he doesn't.

9) The Grandmaster was a murderer and a slave holder. Loki did what he had to in order to survive but had no true loyalty to the Grandmaster who was an enemy that he feared and who might have killed him at any moment. Thus there is no betrayal here because there is no trust. If Loki "betrayed" the Grandmaster then so did Valkyrie, Thor, Korg, the Hulk and all the other slaves who rebelled. Also Loki offered this option to Thor in the context of trying to convince him not to go fight Hela and die.

10) Loki tricked Laufey but he didn't betray him since Laufey was the leader of an enemy nation. If Loki had sided with Laufey in truth then he would have betrayed Asgard. Instead he stayed loyal to the father who raised him and the culture he was raised in. Still. He does literally stab Laufey in the back so I guess I can give them half a point on this one.

11) This is ridiculous. At this point he and Thor are actively engaged in fighting. Loki is simply using one of his standard fighting tactics. Also I think he wants to know if Thor would care enough about him to save him.

12) LOKI OFFERS THE THRONE TO THOR BUT THOR TURNS HIM DOWN! He doesn't "betray" Thor. The scene was shot as a genuine death scene at the time so that was how it was played. Which means in-universe Loki thought he was dying. Then when he survived miraculously he understandably decided not to go back to the horrifically inhumane prison conditions he had been left in. He tried to give Thor the throne and got stuck with it when Thor declined. Under his rule the Asgaridan people were happy and carefree. He didn't oppress or harm them.

ALSO. Even if all the 12 examples were legit, this was 12 times not 50 times. And the fact that Loki was able to successfully trick people each time was due to the fact that this WASN'T part of his usual behavior pattern so he wasn't suspected. And his motivations in all these cases were very big serious things - saving the kingdom from war, saving his brother and people, serving, staying out of a horrific prison. He didn't do these things on a whim or out of greed.

All of this is why I have 0 expectations of series. Im done hoping. Marvel wants us to see Loki as the evil guy who does evil things because he is just evil. In both trailers Loki just stands or sits there and doesnt defend himself. Probably because writers didnt give him chance. They see him as stabby traitor and thats it. @iamnmbr3

NASA Spotlight: Earth Climate Scientist Dr. Yolanda Shea

Dr. Yolanda Shea is a climate scientist at NASA's Langley Research Center. She's the project scientist for the CLARREO Pathfinder (CPF) mission, which is an instrument that will launch to the International Space Station to measure sunlight reflected from Earth. It will help us understand how much heat is being trapped by our planet's atmosphere. Her mission is designed to help us get a clearer picture than we currently have of the Earth's system and how it is changing

Yolanda took time from studying our home planet to answer questions about her life and career! Get to know this Earth scientist:

What inspired you to study climate science?

Starting in early middle school I became interested in the explanations behind the weather maps and satellite images shown on TV. I liked how the meteorologists talked about the temperature, moisture, and winds at different heights in the atmosphere, and then put that together to form the story of our weather forecasts. This made me want to learn more about Earth science, so I went to college to explore this interest more.

The summer after my junior year of college, I had an internship during which my first assignment was to work with a program that estimated ocean currents from satellite measurements. I was fascinated in the fact that scientists had discovered a way to map ocean currents from space!

Although I had learned about Earth remote sensing in my classes, this was my first taste of working with, and understanding the details of, how we could learn more about different aspects of the physical world from satellite measurements.

This led to my learning about other ways we can learn about Earth from space, and that includes rigorous climate monitoring, which is the area I work in now.

What does a day in your life look like?

Before I start my workday, I like to take a few minutes to eat breakfast, knit (I'm loving sock knitting right now!), and listen to a podcast or audio book. Each workday really looks different for me, but regardless, most days are a combination of quieter moments that I can use for individual work and more interactive times when I'm interfacing with colleagues and talking about project or science issues. Both types of work are fun in different ways, but I'm glad I have a mixture because all researchers need that combination of deep thinking to wrap our minds around complex problems and also time to tackle those problems with others and work on solving them together.

When do you feel most connected to Earth?

I've always loved sunsets. I find them peaceful and beautiful, and I love how each one is unique. They are also a beautiful reminder of the versatility of reflected light, which I study. Sitting for a moment to appreciate the beauty and calm I feel during a sunset helps me feel connected to Earth.

International
Space Station
ON-RAMP

What will your mission – CLARREO Pathfinder – tell us about Earth?

CLARREO Pathfinder (CPF) includes an instrument that will take measurements from the International Space Station and will measure reflected sunlight from Earth. One of its goals is to demonstrate that it can take measurements with high enough accuracy so that, if we have such measurements over long periods of time, like several decades, we could detect changes in Earth's climate system. The CPF instrument will do this with higher accuracy than previous satellite instruments we've designed, and these measurements can be used to improve the accuracy of other satellite instruments.

How, if at all, has your worldview changed as a result of your work in climate science?

The longer I work in climate science and learn from the data about how humans have impacted our planet, the more I appreciate the fragility of our one and only home, and the more I want to take care of it.

What advice would you give your younger self?

It's ok to not have everything figured out at every step of your career journey. Work hard, do your best, and enjoy the journey as it unfolds. You'll inevitably have some surprises along the way, and regardless of whether they are welcome or not, you're guaranteed to learn something.

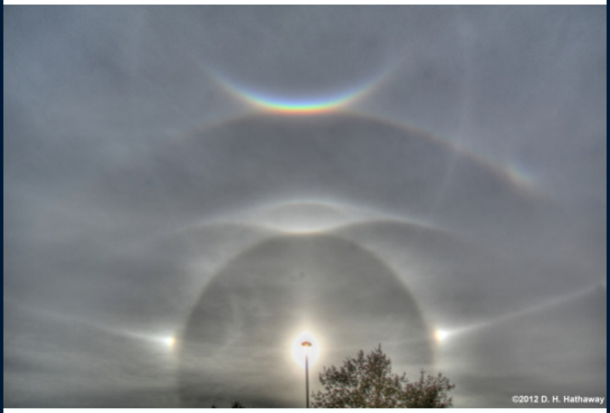
Do you have a favorite metaphor or analogy that you use to describe what you do, and its impact, to those outside of the scientific community?

I see jigsaw puzzles as a good illustration of how different members of a science community play a diverse set of roles to work through different problems. Each member is often working on their own image within the greater puzzle, and although it might take them years of work to see their part of the picture come together, each image in the greater puzzle is essential to completing the whole thing. During my career, I'll work on a section of the puzzle, and I hope to connect my section to others nearby, but we may not finish the whole puzzle. That's ok, however, because we'll hand over the work that we've accomplished to the next generation of scientists, and they will keep working to bring the picture to light. This is how I try to think about my role in climate science – I hope to contribute to the field in some way; the best thing about what I have done and what I will do, is that someone else will be able to build on my work and keep helping humanity come to a better understanding of our Earth system.

What is a course that you think should be part of required school curriculum?

Time and project management skills – I think students tend to learn these skills more organically from their parents and teachers, but in my experience I stumbled along and learned these skills through trial and error. To successfully balance all the different projects that I support now, I have to be organized and disciplined, and I need to have clear plans mapped out, so I have some idea of what's coming and where my attention needs to be focused.

Another course not specifically related to my field is personal financial management. I was interested in personal finance, and that helped me to seek out information (mainly through various blogs) about how to be responsible with my home finances. There is a lot of information out there, but making sure that students have a solid foundation and know what questions to ask early on will set them to for success (and hopefully fewer mistakes) later on.



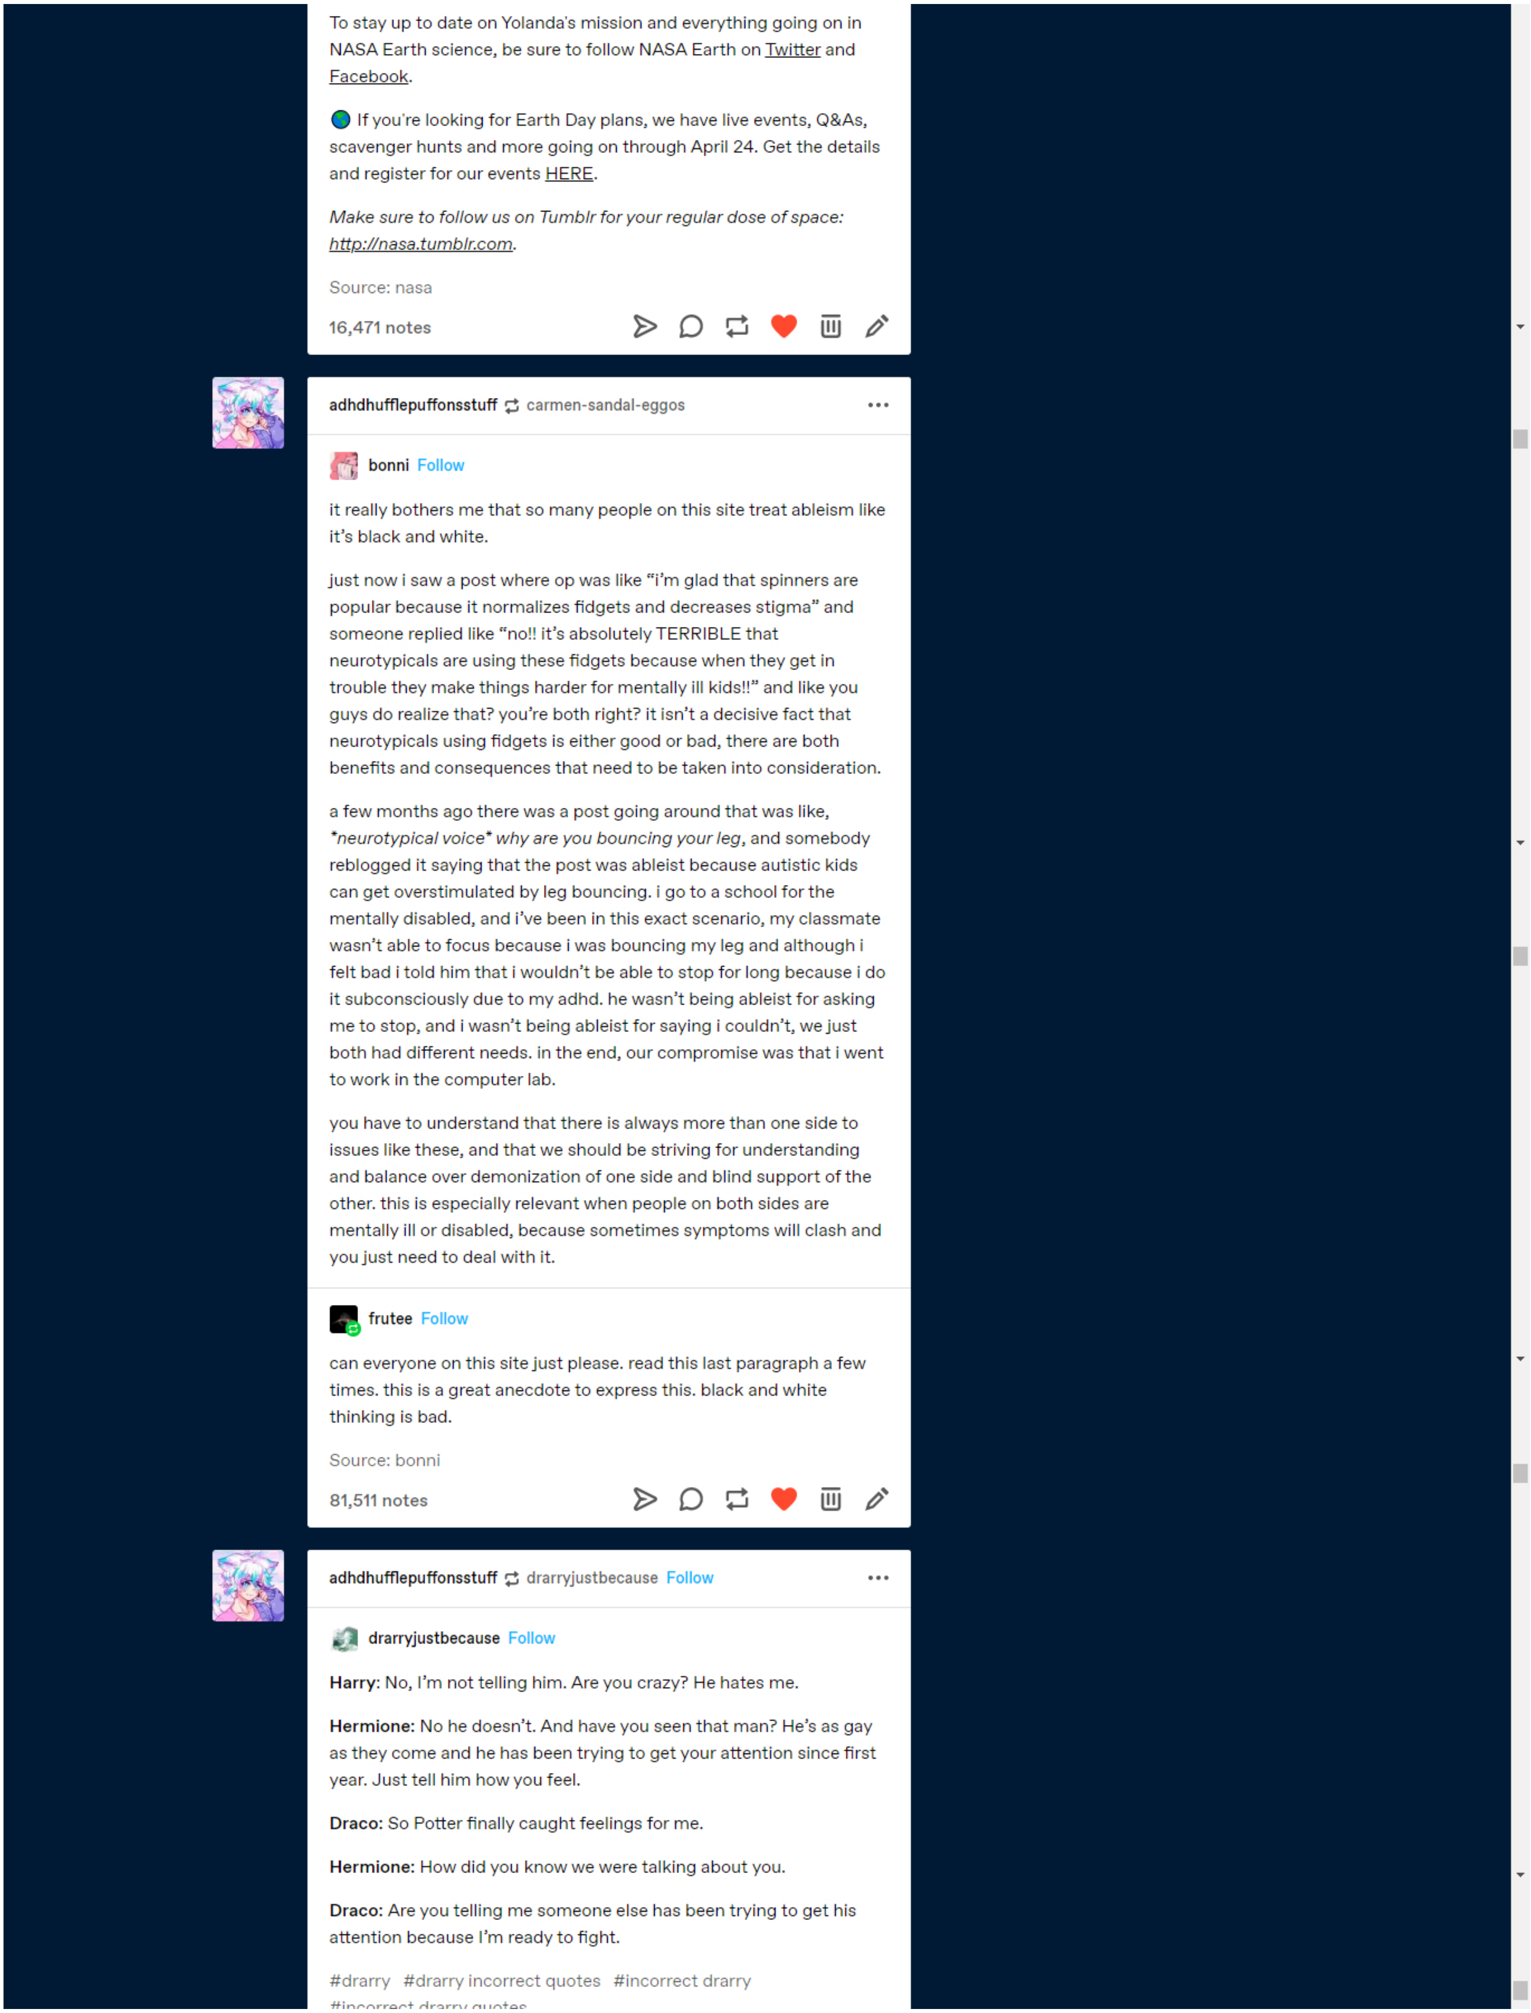
©2012 D. H. Hathaway

What's the most unexpected time or place that your expertise in climate science and/or algorithms came in handy?

I think an interesting part of being an atmospheric scientist and a known sky-watcher is that I get to notice beautiful moments in the sky. I remember being on a trip with friends and I looked up (as I usually do), and I was gifted with a gorgeous sundog and halo arc. It was such a beautiful moment, and because I noticed it, my friends got to enjoy it too.

Can you share a photo or image from a memorable NASA project you've worked on, and tell us a little bit about why the project stood out to you?

I absolutely loved being on the PBS Kids TV Show, SciGirls for their episode SkyGirls! This featured a NASA program called Students' Clouds Observations On-Line (S'COOL). It was a citizen science program where students from around the globe could take observations of clouds from the ground that coincided with satellite overpasses, and the intention was to help scientists validate (or check) the accuracy of the code they use to detect clouds from satellite measurements. I grew up watching educational programming from PBS, so it was an honor to be a science mentor on a TV show that I knew would reach children across the nation who might be interested in different STEM fields. In this photo, the three young women I worked with on the show and I are talking about the different types of clouds.



To stay up to date on Yolanda's mission and everything going on in NASA Earth science, be sure to follow NASA Earth on Twitter and Facebook.

it really bothers me that so many people on this site treat ableism like it's black and white.

just now i saw a post where op was like "i'm glad that spinners are popular because it normalizes fidgets and decreases stigma" and someone replied like "no!! it's absolutely TERRIBLE that neurotypicals are using these fidgets because when they get in trouble they make things harder for mentally ill kids!!" and like you guys do realize that? you're both right? it isn't a decisive fact that neurotypicals using fidgets is either good or bad, there are both benefits and consequences that need to be taken into consideration.

a few months ago there was a post going around that was like, neurotypical voice* why are you bouncing your leg*, and somebody reblogged it saying that the post was ableist because autistic kids can get overstimulated by leg bouncing. i go to a school for the mentally disabled, and i've been in this exact scenario, my classmate wasn't able to focus because i was bouncing my leg and although i felt bad i told him that i wouldn't be able to stop for long because i do it subconsciously due to my adhd. he wasn't being ableist for asking me to stop, and i wasn't being ableist for saying i couldn't, we just both had different needs. in the end, our compromise was that i went to work in the computer lab.

you have to understand that there is always more than one side to issues like these, and that we should be striving for understanding and balance over demonization of one side and blind support of the other. this is especially relevant when people on both sides are mentally ill or disabled, because sometimes symptoms will clash and you just need to deal with it.

Because casual, platonic affection is so taboo in our society that whenever anyone wants to hold a friend’s hand or snuggle on the couch, it is automatically assumed they must be after sex. This is especially true if the person in question was socialized as a man.

greenreticule Follow

relating all physical affection to sex really messes with people’s need for physical contact with others. it teaches us to isolate ourselves and deny ourselves critical interactions lest we be mistaken for pursuing sex. this is really isolating for people who are sex-indifferent, sex-repulsed, or asexual, but it affects everyone.

There was this old lady who lived across the street and cats would just appear at her house. They'd never really be seen again, and she had a cat of her own with a collar and all who never really left the house but would spend most of the day by the bay window. But the rest were just a revolving door of random cats. Which naturally meant kittens would pop up too.

So one time when I was doing my high school volunteer hours at this animal shelter, she showed up and said she had some kittens to drop off and some to pick up. I thought it was weird but I figured she fostered them and so I assumed she fostered cats and that explained the amount of random cats I'd see at her place (turns out she'd lure strays in for spaying/neutering and then take them to shelters around the area for socializing and ideally adoption).

So she dropped off three extremely socialized and friendly kittens that I guess she had picked up 2 days prior. And then grabbed a kennel thing with five feral-ass kittens one of the donors found near a dumpster.

I had seen them earlier but the day manager told me they had just gotten them the day before and they had not been socialized because they were waiting for "the expert". And I guess that was this lady. So she puts on these thick black gloves and goes "Sweetheart can you hold this for me? I gotta prep the babies", and I held the kennel still while this woman just 100% no fear sticks her hand in there and grabs a kitten that is NOT happy about it. She then grabbed it by the head gently, wrapped a tea towel or some type of cloth thing around it, and then laid it down to do something that was like equal parts origami fold and burrito roll?? Idek. Point is the kitten was PISSED. But it couldn't move or anything because she wrapped it and secured the wrap with one of them big old timey baby pins. And she did it to the others as well. It didn't even take her 5 minutes lmaooo. Then she put them back in the kennel and went home.

I asked the manager about it and he said "Oh yeah she'll be here in 2 days to drop them off. She has a M E T H O D." And just as he said she showed up two days later, with 5 perfectly friendly kittens in tow!

I didn't ask because I assumed she was a witch and also I didn't care, but I had mad respect for her 😂

Confession:

I desperately want to break into voice acting & have for years, but I have such awful voice dysphoria that I can't bring myself to settle for voicing women.

I don't think I'll ever get the opportunity for an enby role, either, because I don't sound "androgynous."

My dream voice acting work would be, like, a kickass nonbinary knight or literally anything in a medieval fantasy. I want to bring my ren faire goofiness and intensity to a voice acting role. It would be so much fucking fun.

What is the POINT of having a battlefield commander voice if I never get to voice a powerhouse nonbinary knight in a medieval fantasy, goddammit!!!

Today's edition of "weird niche things that probably only I think about," brought to you by a meme I saw about space:

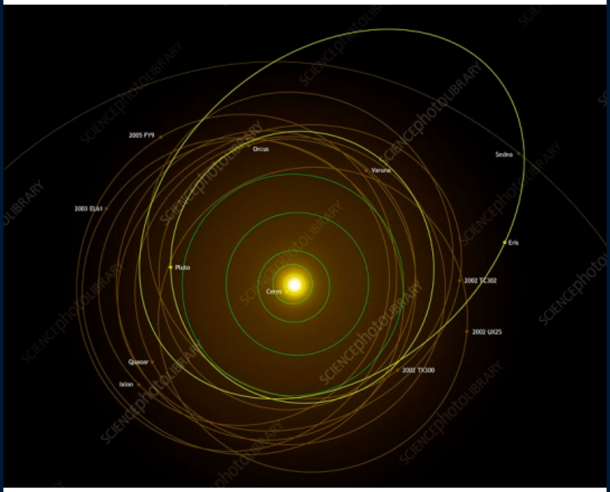
Regardless of Pluto's status as a planet or not-planet, and all memes aside, why does Pluto get left off most modern charts of the solar system? Like, I get that it's not classified as a planet anymore, but it's??? still in the solar system???? It didn't go anywhere.

Is it a case of "if we added Pluto we'd have to add all the other mini-planets and there's way too many for a simple diagram designed for a classroom" or something like that?

Please, science side of tumblr, someone has to know.

the-astro-ace Follow

Yep, pretty much



Pluto has been the largest discovered in terms of volume, but Eris (my favorite, my love) is the largest in terms of mass. So if we kept Pluto as a planet, we would have also probably had to have added Eris as a planet as well. Not to mention several other possible dwarf planets have been discovered, many in recent years. Sedna in that diagram there takes 11,400 years to orbit, so there could be dozens more planetoids in similar orbits that we have never seen because they're too far away at the moment, so we would have to come up with a definite cut off between which dwarf planets get included, and which don't. So it's easier to just say all of them aren't "planets" lol

I am so oddly delighted that my complete guess turned out to be accurate, lol.

Honestly as a blind person I'm so tired of seeing fictional blind characters who don't use white canes or other guides. "They have special powers so they know what's around them" or "they're confident enough to not need a guide" are common tropes, and I'm tired.

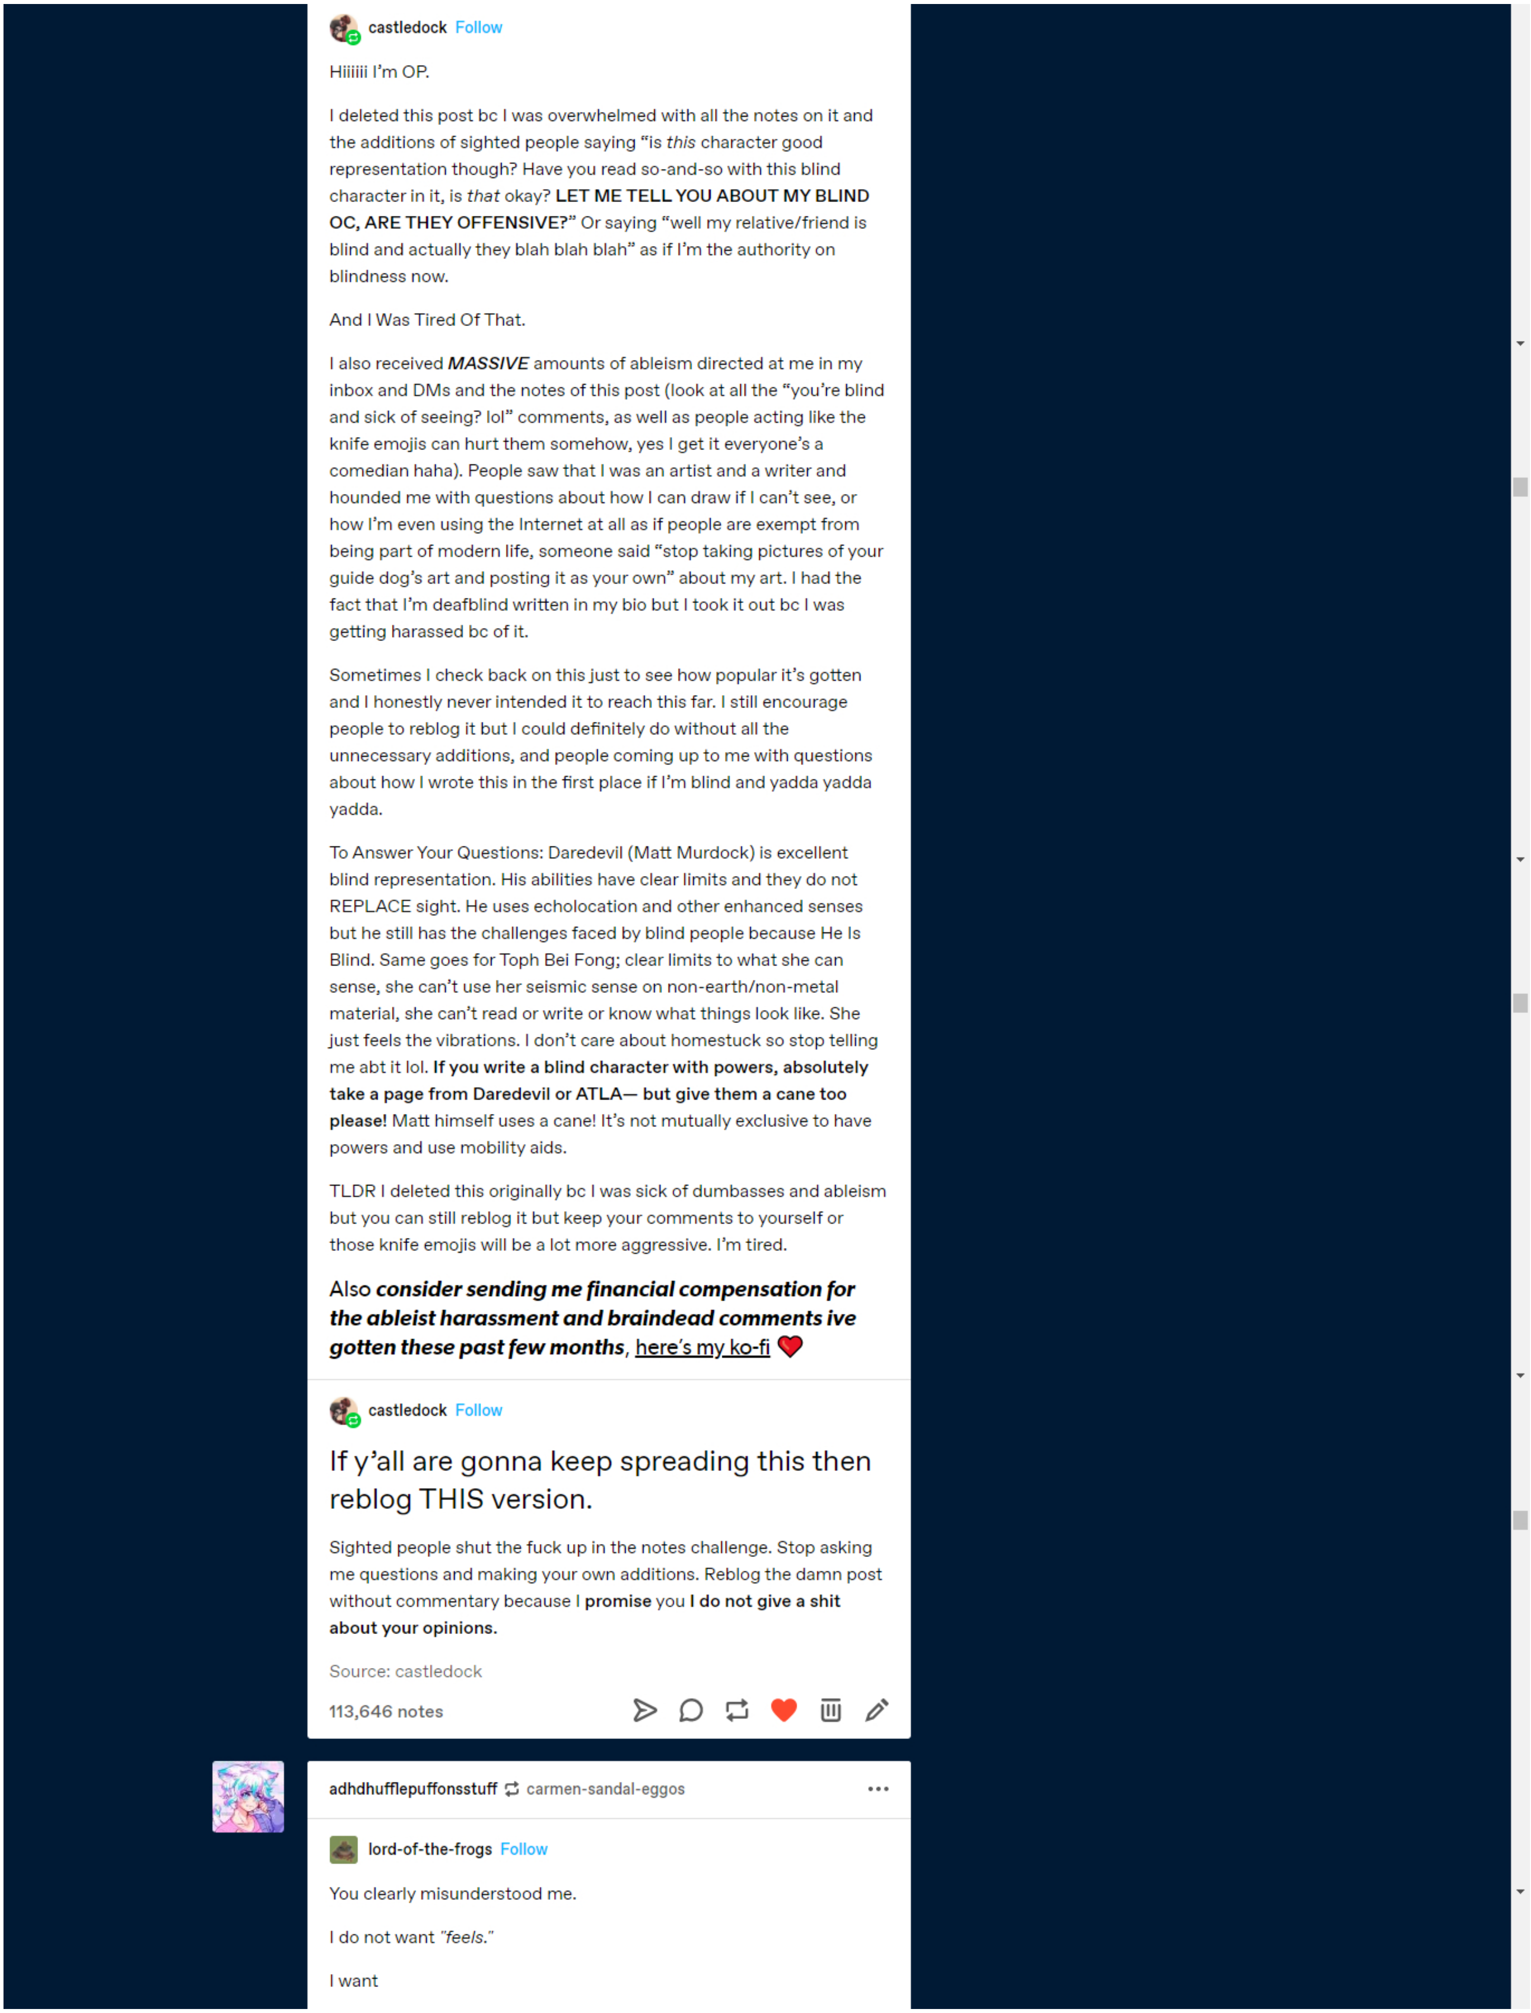
Are people scared that using a white cane will make their blind character seem weak? They can't use a cane because they're so special that they already know what's around them, and other blind people who use guides are inferior because they're not special?

I'm tired. Give your blind characters white canes and other guides. Let them hold onto their friends, let them have guide dogs. Don't make white cane users feel ostracized for not being "strong enough" to go without.

Another thing that pisses me off is when a sighted character comes up with the fantasy equivalent of braille and teaches it to the blind character. Braille was invented by Louis Braille, a blind man, in 1824. The blind character should be the one coming up with it.

Tldr I'm blind and tired of sighted people lol

Sighted People MUST Reblog This



castledock Follow

Hiiiiii I'm OP.

I deleted this post bc I was overwhelmed with all the notes on it and the additions of sighted people saying "is this character good representation though? Have you read so-and-so with this blind character in it, is that okay? LET ME TELL YOU ABOUT MY BLIND OC, ARE THEY OFFENSIVE?" Or saying "well my relative/friend is blind and actually they blah blah blah" as if I'm the authority on blindness now.

And I Was Tired Of That.

I also received MASSIVE amounts of ableism directed at me in my inbox and DMs and the notes of this post (look at all the "you're blind and sick of seeing? lol" comments, as well as people acting like the knife emojis can hurt them somehow, yes I get it everyone's a comedian haha). People saw that I was an artist and a writer and hounded me with questions about how I can draw if I can't see, or how I'm even using the Internet at all as if people are exempt from being part of modern life, someone said "stop taking pictures of your guide dog's art and posting it as your own" about my art. I had the fact that I'm deafblind written in my bio but I took it out bc I was getting harassed bc of it.

Sometimes I check back on this just to see how popular it's gotten and I honestly never intended it to reach this far. I still encourage people to reblog it but I could definitely do without all the unnecessary additions, and people coming up to me with questions about how I wrote this in the first place if I'm blind and yadda yadda yadda.

To Answer Your Questions: Daredevil (Matt Murdock) is excellent blind representation. His abilities have clear limits and they do not REPLACE sight. He uses echolocation and other enhanced senses but he still has the challenges faced by blind people because He Is Blind. Same goes for Toph Bei Fong; clear limits to what she can sense, she can't use her seismic sense on non-earth/non-metal material, she can't read or write or know what things look like. She just feels the vibrations. I don't care about homestuck so stop telling me abt it lol. If you write a blind character with powers, absolutely take a page from Daredevil or ATLA— but give them a cane too please! Matt himself uses a cane! It's not mutually exclusive to have powers and use mobility aids.

TLDR I deleted this originally bc I was sick of dumbasses and ableism but you can still reblog it but keep your comments to yourself or those knife emojis will be a lot more aggressive. I'm tired.

Also consider sending me financial compensation for the ableist harassment and braindead comments ive gotten these past few months, here's my ko-fi ❤

NASA Spotlight: Earth Climate Scientist Dr. Yolanda Shea

Dr. Yolanda Shea is a climate scientist at NASA's Langley Research Center. She's the project scientist for the CLARREO Pathfinder (CPF) mission, which is an instrument that will launch to the International Space Station to measure sunlight reflected from Earth. It will help us understand how much heat is being trapped by our planet's atmosphere. Her mission is designed to help us get a clearer picture than we currently have of the Earth's system and how it is changing

Yolanda took time from studying our home planet to answer questions about her life and career! Get to know this Earth scientist:

What inspired you to study climate science?

Starting in early middle school I became interested in the explanations behind the weather maps and satellite images shown on TV. I liked how the meteorologists talked about the temperature, moisture, and winds at different heights in the atmosphere, and then put that together to form the story of our weather forecasts. This made me want to learn more about Earth science, so I went to college to explore this interest more.

The summer after my junior year of college, I had an internship during which my first assignment was to work with a program that estimated ocean currents from satellite measurements. I was fascinated in the fact that scientists had discovered a way to map ocean currents from space!

Although I had learned about Earth remote sensing in my classes, this was my first taste of working with, and understanding the details of, how we could learn more about different aspects of the physical world from satellite measurements.

This led to my learning about other ways we can learn about Earth from space, and that includes rigorous climate monitoring, which is the area I work in now.

What does a day in your life look like?

Before I start my workday, I like to take a few minutes to eat breakfast, knit (I'm loving sock knitting right now!), and listen to a podcast or audio book. Each workday really looks different for me, but regardless, most days are a combination of quieter moments that I can use for individual work and more interactive times when I'm interfacing with colleagues and talking about project or science issues. Both types of work are fun in different ways, but I'm glad I have a mixture because all researchers need that combination of deep thinking to wrap our minds around complex problems and also time to tackle those problems with others and work on solving them together.

When do you feel most connected to Earth?

I've always loved sunsets. I find them peaceful and beautiful, and I love how each one is unique. They are also a beautiful reminder of the versatility of reflected light, which I study. Sitting for a moment to appreciate the beauty and calm I feel during a sunset helps me feel connected to Earth.

connected to Earth.

International Space Station
ON-RAMP

What will your mission – CLARREO Pathfinder – tell us about Earth?

CLARREO Pathfinder (CPF) includes an instrument that will take measurements from the International Space Station and will measure reflected sunlight from Earth. One of its goals is to demonstrate that it can take measurements with high enough accuracy so that, if we have such measurements over long periods of time, like several decades, we could detect changes in Earth's climate system. The CPF instrument will do this with higher accuracy than previous satellite instruments we've designed, and these measurements can be used to improve the accuracy of other satellite instruments.

How, if at all, has your worldview changed as a result of your work in climate science?

The longer I work in climate science and learn from the data about how humans have impacted our planet, the more I appreciate the fragility of our one and only home, and the more I want to take care of it.

HD
NASA

What advice would you give your younger self?

It's ok to not have everything figured out at every step of your career journey. Work hard, do your best, and enjoy the journey as it unfolds. You'll inevitably have some surprises along the way, and regardless of whether they are welcome or not, you're guaranteed to learn something.

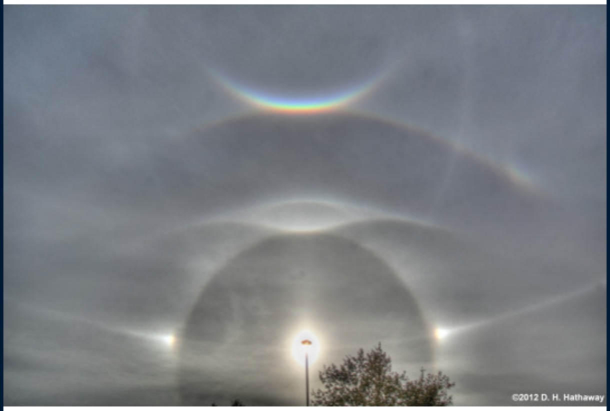
Do you have a favorite metaphor or analogy that you use to describe what you do, and its impact, to those outside of the scientific community?

I see jigsaw puzzles as a good illustration of how different members of a science community play a diverse set of roles to work through different problems. Each member is often working on their own image within the greater puzzle, and although it might take them years of work to see their part of the picture come together, each image in the greater puzzle is essential to completing the whole thing. During my career, I'll work on a section of the puzzle, and I hope to connect my section to others nearby, but we may not finish the whole puzzle. That's ok, however, because we'll hand over the work that we've accomplished to the next generation of scientists, and they will keep working to bring the picture to light. This is how I try to think about my role in climate science – I hope to contribute to the field in some way; the best thing about what I have done and what I will do, is that someone else will be able to build on my work and keep helping humanity come to a better understanding of our Earth system.

What is a course that you think should be part of required school curriculum?

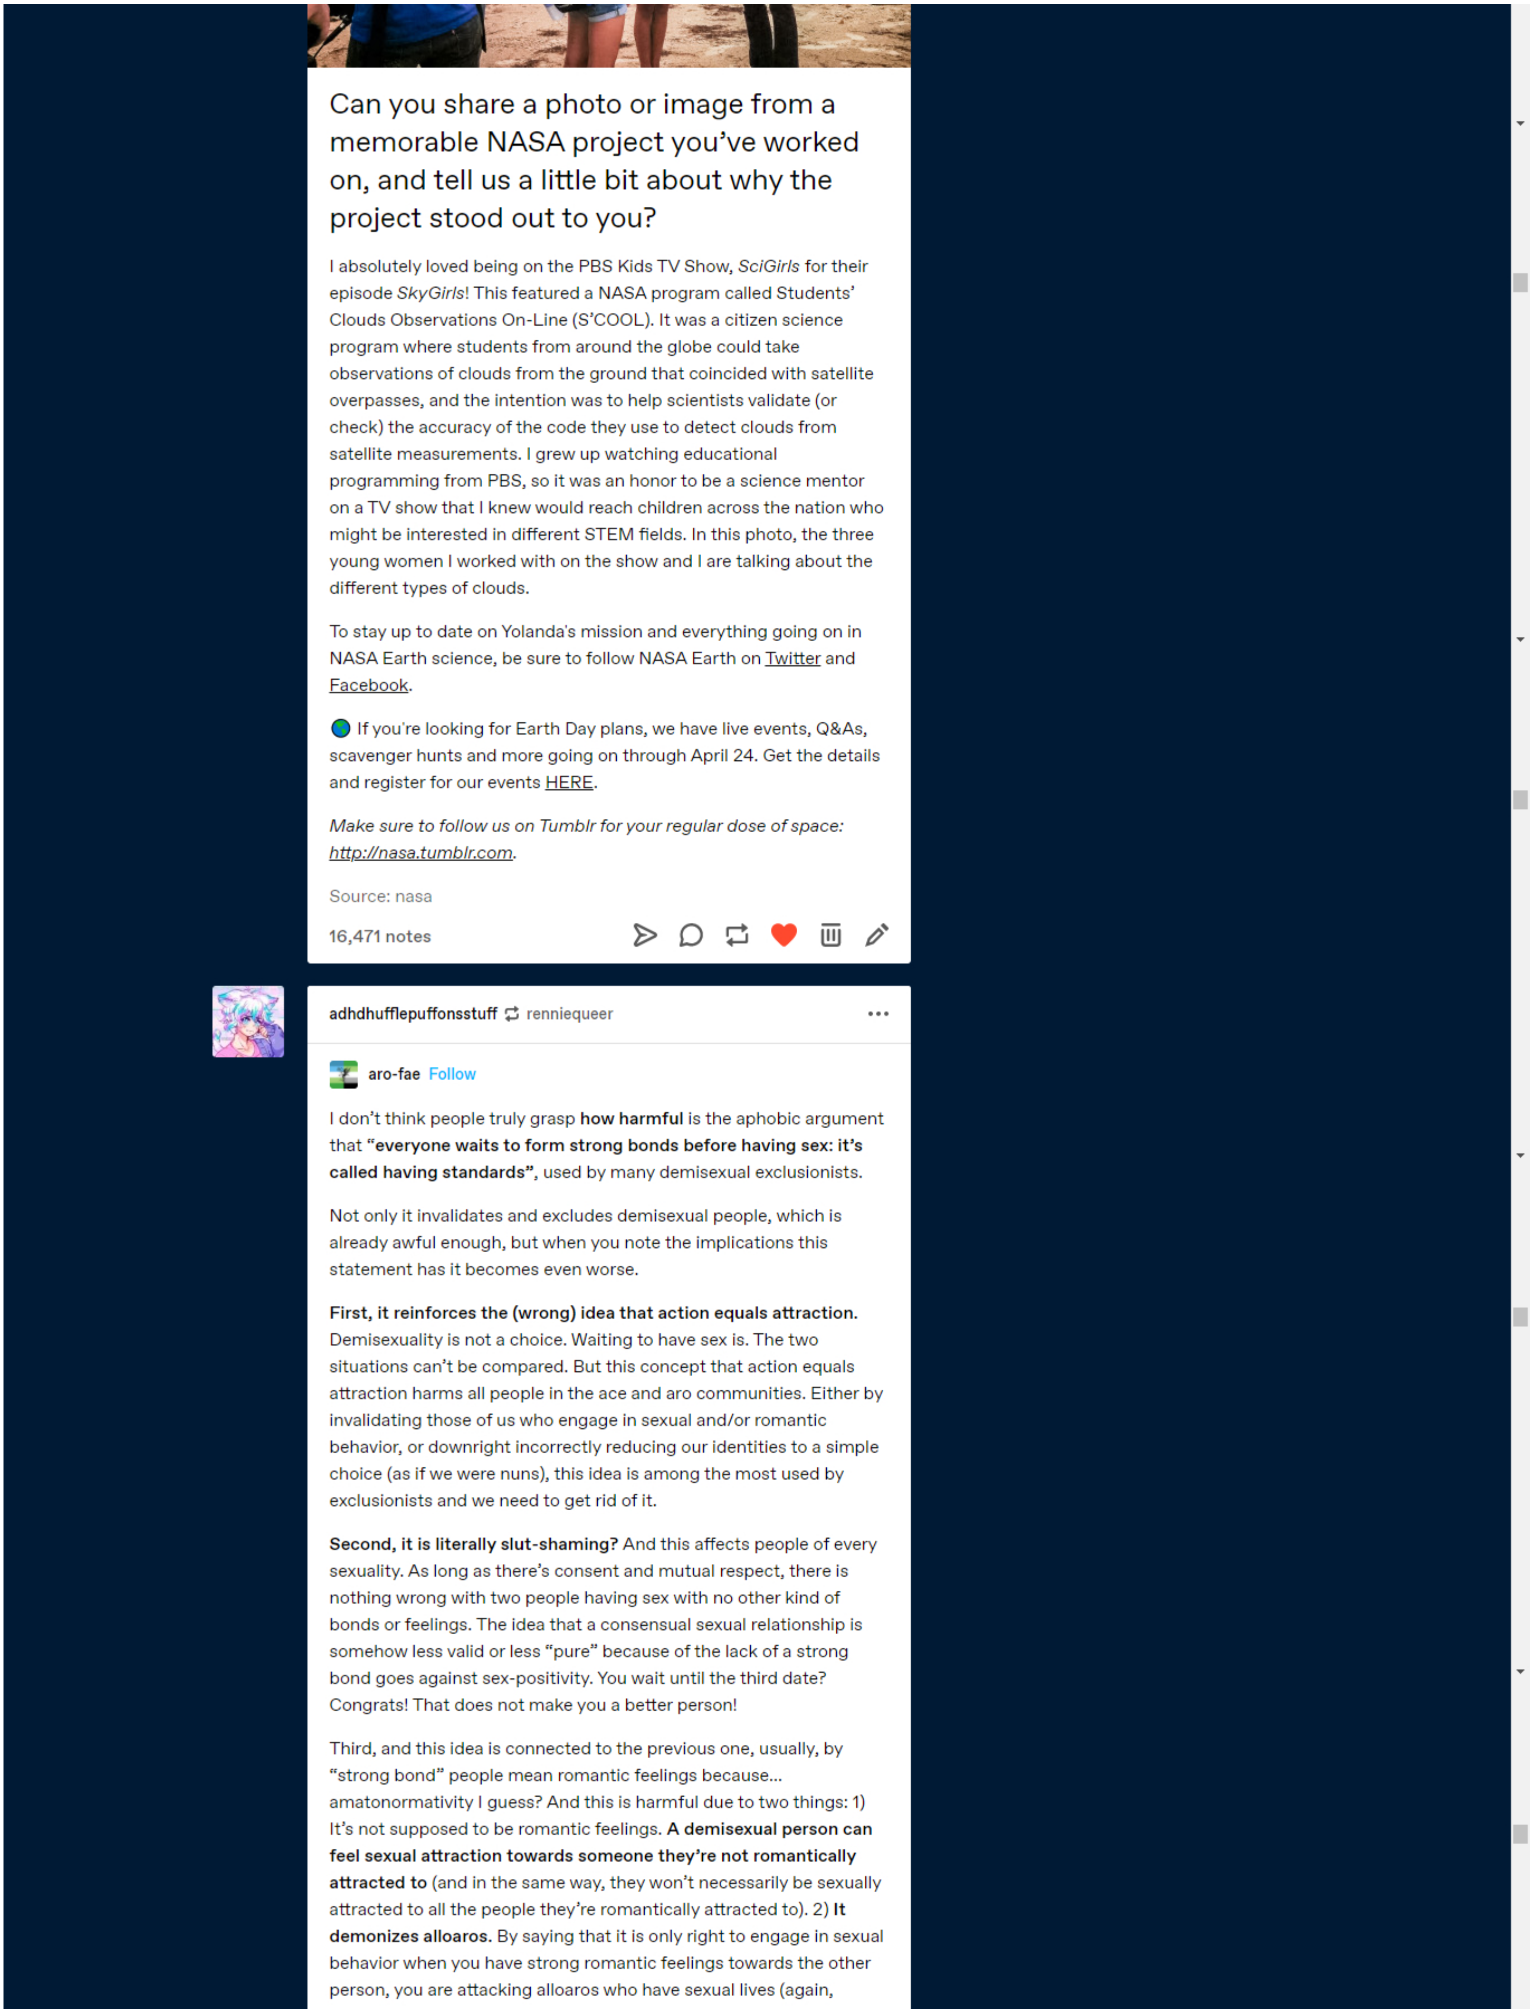
Time and project management skills – I think students tend to learn these skills more organically from their parents and teachers, but in my experience I stumbled along and learned these skills through trial and error. To successfully balance all the different projects that I support now, I have to be organized and disciplined, and I need to have clear plans mapped out, so I have some idea of what's coming and where my attention needs to be focused.

Another course not specifically related to my field is personal financial management. I was interested in personal finance, and that helped me to seek out information (mainly through various blogs) about how to be responsible with my home finances. There is a lot of information out there, but making sure that students have a solid foundation and know what questions to ask early on will set them to for success (and hopefully fewer mistakes) later on.



What's the most unexpected time or place that your expertise in climate science and/or algorithms came in handy?

I think an interesting part of being an atmospheric scientist and a known sky-watcher is that I get to notice beautiful moments in the sky. I remember being on a trip with friends and I looked up (as I usually do), and I was gifted with a gorgeous sundog and halo arc. It was such a beautiful moment, and because I noticed it, my friends got to enjoy it too.



Can you share a photo or image from a memorable NASA project you've worked on, and tell us a little bit about why the project stood out to you?

I absolutely loved being on the PBS Kids TV Show, SciGirls for their episode SkyGirls! This featured a NASA program called Students' Clouds Observations On-Line (S'COOL). It was a citizen science program where students from around the globe could take observations of clouds from the ground that coincided with satellite overpasses, and the intention was to help scientists validate (or check) the accuracy of the code they use to detect clouds from satellite measurements. I grew up watching educational programming from PBS, so it was an honor to be a science mentor on a TV show that I knew would reach children across the nation who might be interested in different STEM fields. In this photo, the three young women I worked with on the show and I are talking about the different types of clouds.

I don't think people truly grasp how harmful is the aphobic argument that "everyone waits to form strong bonds before having sex: it's called having standards", used by many demisexual exclusionists.

Not only it invalidates and excludes demisexual people, which is already awful enough, but when you note the implications this statement has it becomes even worse.

First, it reinforces the (wrong) idea that action equals attraction. Demisexuality is not a choice. Waiting to have sex is. The two situations can't be compared. But this concept that action equals attraction harms all people in the ace and aro communities. Either by invalidating those of us who engage in sexual and/or romantic behavior, or downright incorrectly reducing our identities to a simple choice (as if we were nuns), this idea is among the most used by exclusionists and we need to get rid of it.

Second, it is literally slut-shaming? And this affects people of every sexuality. As long as there's consent and mutual respect, there is nothing wrong with two people having sex with no other kind of bonds or feelings. The idea that a consensual sexual relationship is somehow less valid or less "pure" because of the lack of a strong bond goes against sex-positivity. You wait until the third date? Congrats! That does not make you a better person!

Third, and this idea is connected to the previous one, usually, by "strong bond" people mean romantic feelings because... amatonormativity I guess? And this is harmful due to two things: 1) It's not supposed to be romantic feelings. A demisexual person can feel sexual attraction towards someone they're not romantically attracted to (and in the same way, they won't necessarily be sexually attracted to all the people they're romantically attracted to). 2) It demonizes alloaros. By saying that it is only right to engage in sexual behavior when you have strong romantic feelings towards the other person, you are attacking alloaros who have sexual lives (again, distinction between action and attraction). And again, there's nothing wrong with an alloaro acting on the attraction they do feel because there's nothing wrong with people having consensual sex. Full period.

This statement, as many other used by exclusionists, is rooted in amatonormativity, sex-negativity and aphobia. It goes deeper than just your disgusting demisexual exclusionist argument.

We need to dismantle the systems in place that allow white people to get away with offering black people sub-par services based on the excuse that our bodies are more difficult to work with. Black hair is not more difficult than white hair, it simply requires a different skill set. Photographing black people isn't more difficult than photographing white people, it simply requires an understanding of photography. Doing makeup on black skin isn't more difficult than doing makeup on white skin, it simply requires different products. This is extremely similar to the dilemma faced by disabled people. It is no more expensive to design a building with ramps instead of stairs, it's only when you create the building first and have to tear down the stairs and replace them that you incur costs. If we teach the skills of inclusion from the beginning, there should be no additional costs for services and accessiblity for anybody.

afronerdism Follow

Initially I wasn't sure I wanted to diverge from the axis of race over to disability, but I actually think that the analogy of that building and how it's only after we've institutionalized inequality that costs are incurred trying to fix it, is a valuable one so thanks for the contribution.

interstellarghostparty Follow

I think about this a lot when it comes to medicine. Especially in obstetrics. Black women are more likely to die in childbirth and immediately in postpartum than their white counterparts. And 1/3 (yes, a THIRD) of medical residents when asked said they think black women experience pain differently (specifically less intensely) than white women. They are often ignored, especially when it comes to pain. Black bodies are just as precious, just as worthy and important and medical racism is a deadly threat to WOC.

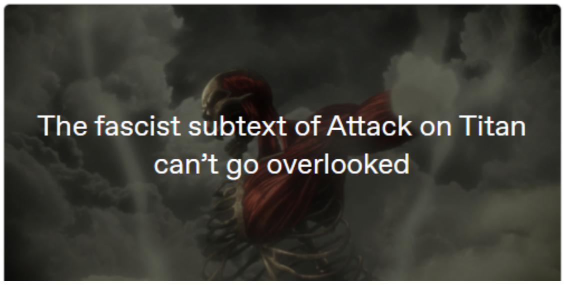
for a lot of people, attack on titan was their first introduction to anime, so its global reach cannot be ignored. that has led to a lot of fervent people trying to defend this show without looking more deeply into what we are saying. if you're about to do something stupid like comment on this post when you don't truly know what anyone is talking about or you just feel annoyed that we are knocking your favorite anime, read this first and then decide if you really wanna make that stupid comment.



The fascist subtext of Attack on Titan can't go overlooked

The story’s twist exposes the ugly side of the manga and anime from forcing an entire group of people to wear nazi armbands to the author’s own personal beliefs, do not sit here and say we’re looking too much into it. fuck off. fascism is on a global rise and it should scare you, and any decent person with common sense should be against any type of media depiction that is advocating for fascism/nazism/war crimes/ethnic cleansing. it’s beyond “it’s just a piece of fiction.” MEDIA INFLUENCES REAL LIFE. if you think media doesn’t influence real life and real life opinions, you are seriously deluding yourself. i don’t really know what to say beyond that.

qanon and the rise of the proud boys (a literal pro-fascist group) should be enough proof that we don’t live in a fucking fishbowl when it comes to fascism.

willowdove Follow

So I’m teaching English right now, and I just had my students write an essay about their heroes. A couple of my students picked Attack on Titan characters, because I let them choose fictional characters as well. One picked Eren Jaegar. He said that he admired that he was willing to do whatever it takes to protect his family and his homeland. When describing the lengths Eren was willing to go to, this student explicitly included MASS GENOCIDE in the list. And I uh. Well I sent him to guidance.

I understand the appeal of these franchises. Hell I used to be into them myself. But please realize that when you consume fascist media, you’re internalizing the same messages my Eren Jaegar fan student has. When you’re being repeatedly asked to sympathize and root for characters that are bad people who do terrible things, you start to excuse and rationalize those behaviors. You start to be desensitized to actions that should rightly elicit horror in you.

I’m not saying that watching Attack on Titan automatically makes you a genocide apologist. I’m not saying that we can’t think critically about the media we consume. I’m not saying we can’t have media from a villian’s points of view either. What I AM saying, is that framing is important. And unfortanely it’s almost impossible to get away from the positive framing of fascism in AoT and Hetalia. And if you spend too much time in a warped frame, you’ll warp to match. It’s really not worth it to keep engaging in that material.

I think it’s worthwhile to also mention that my student’s aspiration is to become a soldier. He wants to emulate Eren Jaegar in the defense of America. And I hope you can see how dangerous that mindset is for an armed forces member. A soldier should be able to make tough choices. A soldier should NOT be willing to do “whatever it takes” with no limits, self-justified by a sense of extreme nationalism. Yeah. That’s what you’re internalizing, folks.

TLDR; Don’t keep watching and producing fan content for franchises that promote fascism. Please. Respect yourself more than that.

SO I’m a panelist at anime conventions, and one of the panels I have in development is “if you liked X, try Y!” Basically: if you enjoyed this more recent anime, you may also enjoy these older anime. It’s like the “suggested for you” playlists on Spotify.

ANYWAY

I have not done Hetalia because “X” is always from 2011 or newer (otherwise I’d be paneling for the entire con and still not done). BUT, I am working on SnK/AoT.

So if you read this post and went “but…there were so many things I liked….” HERE’S THE CURRENT LIST FOR YOU. Go forth, find a new favorite, I hope you enjoy these.

TRIGUN: 1998, 26 episodes (plus an AU movie). Post-apocalyptic steampunk western, the story follows the adventures of Vash the Stampede, who has a sixty-million double-dollar bounty on his head —dead or alive. Thing is, he’s not who you think he is. First half is heavy on humor with some dives into philosophy; second half is All Aboard The Feels Train for thoughts on life, death, love, and what it means to be human.

FULLMETAL ALCHEMIST BROTHERHOOD: 2009-2010, 64 episodes. Steampunk supernatural military suspense. The story follows brothers Edward and Alphonse Elric, a pair of alchemists, attempting to find the Philosopher's Stone. Along the way they discover a deep government/military conspiracy, and have to set things right. The story is widely considered one of the best shōnen manga and anime of all time, and considers questions of military ethics and humanity.

THE IRRESPONSIBLE CAPTAIN TYLOR: 1993, 26 episodes. Space opera/parody. While this may seem an extremely strange option to have on this list, it's here for those who enjoy the battles and conflict of AoT. Captain Tylor follows the adventures of a man who basically dumb-lucks his way into command of a ship and then proceeds to continue to dumb-luck his way across the galaxy as part of an interplanetary war. The show asks the question, and leaves the question up to the viewer: is Tylor an idiot, or a genius?

You have many, many options! I promise you'll find a new show to love.

anyway i think it's really funny how this nsfw ban has played itself out. the staff has basically stopped trying to remove the porn and instead just blacklisted certain terms so that you can't search for them, thus meaning that the only way you can see pornographic content is if you are suddenly and unwillingly exposed to it - in short, precisely the thing that the nsfw ban was trying to prevent from happening in the first place. good job, guys

punkfaery Follow

#i was suddenly and unwillingly exposed to porn on tumblr before the nsfw ban though

that's exactly my point! the ban obliterated all the pros of nsfw content (the existence of a somewhat safe/anonymous platform for sex workers to operate from, artists trying to get exposure, regular horny people being horny, etc etc) and kept all the cons (random porn bots following you, untagged porn appearing on your dash). it achieved nothing and in a lot of ways made things actively worse

I think like, the death of Vine and Rabbit, Wikipedia constantly needing to beg for money, Discord depending so heavily on venture capital, Facebook turning towards spying on users to generate a return on all the venture capital that got them started, Adobe creative suite turning into a subscription rather than a single product you buy, the strangulation of streaming entertainment as every company pulls their content and makes it exclusive to their service, are all great examples of how like, it really doesn't matter if something is legitimately useful, efficient, or beloved, it is next to impossible for a service to exist if it doesn't make shareholders increasing amounts of money year after year. Which may seem like a "no duh" type of statement, but it's a very simple window into how the profit motive makes products and services worse, not better. And how that's not just a matter of certain companies or ceos being bad and greedy on an individual level, but is an inescapable factor of an economy where existence is dependent on generating capital.

We need to dismantle the systems in place that allow white people to get away with offering black people sub-par services based on the excuse that our bodies are more difficult to work with. Black hair is not more difficult than white hair, it simply requires a different skill set. Tattooing vibrant tattoos on black skin isn't more difficult than tattooing white skin, it simply requires a different skill set. Photographing black people isn't more difficult than photographing white people, it simply requires an understanding of photography. Doing makeup on black skin isn't more difficult than doing makeup on white skin, it simply requires different products. Working with black people is not more difficult than working with white people you've all just been taught that it's not valuable and therefore not worth learning how.

This is extremely similar to the dilemma faced by disabled people. It is no more expensive to design a building with ramps instead of stairs, it's only when you create the building first and have to tear down the stairs and replace them that you incur costs. If we teach the skills of inclusion from the beginning, there should be no additional costs for services and accessiblity for anybody.

Initially I wasn't sure I wanted to diverge from the axis of race over to disability, but I actually think that the analogy of that building and how it's only after we've institutionalized inequality that costs are incurred trying to fix it, is a valuable one so thanks for the contribution.

interstellarghostparty Follow

I think about this a lot when it comes to medicine. Especially in obstetrics. Black women are more likely to die in childbirth and immediately in postpartum than their white counterparts. And 1/3 (yes, a THIRD) of medical residents when asked said they think black women experience pain differently (specifically less intensely) than white women. They are often ignored, especially when it comes to pain. Black bodies are just as precious, just as worthy and important and medical racism is a deadly threat to WOC.

Related to this, I have a question. You know the "John Mulaney as …" meme where people post screenshots from your specials related to a certain theme? Or just the general idea of being turned into a reaction GIF? What is it like to experience that happening to you? Is it weird to see yourself meme-ified?

It sounds like mummified, which is … I've never heard it used that way. It is, yeah. It is very funny when my wife or a friend, after I text something stupid, will send me a GIF of myself as a way to put me down.

Your wife does that to you?
Occasionally, yes. [Laughs.] I'm trying to remember one from recently. I know that I was on a text chain with my friend Pete [Davidson] and my wife, and they were both sending GIFs at me and as a way to put me down in a very fun way.

That's great.
In terms of the using quotes thing, I saw one of them that was Shakespeare plays, and I was embarrassed because I didn't know enough about the plays to get how the quotes of mine matched up. So I sort of appreciated it, but I kind of felt very uneducated.

Well, that's kind of great in a way, you know? That your material could be turned into something where even you don't understand it.
If I don't understand how my own material relates to Othello or King Lear, I can still nod and pretend I do.

I live in the city Elon Musk built his SpaceX spaceport. Brownsville, Texas. It is a border town with majority of the population Mexican and Latino. With a significant amount of the population immigrants who crossed the border over for a chance at a better life. And as a Mexican and local, I can tell you things here are much worse than it seems.

The debris of his spaceships have landed on land that is considered a wildlife reserve for endangered-species.

Its home to an extremely rare beetle (the Boca Chica Flea Beetle.) known for its golden brown hue. This beetle is classed as a 'Species of Greatest Conservation Need'.

© Mike Quinn, TexasEnto.net

The sand dunes of Boca Chica are the only known habitat of the Boca Chica Flea Beetle.

The small golden brown beetle has distinctive indents along its back, making it appear almost spotted.

Its larvae are known to be subterranean, feeding on the underground portions of their host plants.

The beetle is classes as a 'Species of Greatest Conservation Need' by the state of Texas.

And a little known ant species that hasn't even been given a scientific name yet! (Its only been found in one other place in texas and Nicaragua.)

© Steven Wang

Twitter/Steven Wang

An 'undescribed temnothorax' is known to live in the area surrounding the SpaceX Boca Chica site.

The ant is shiny and brown in colour, with lighter legs and antanea.

Little is known about the insect, which has also been sighted in Goliad, Texas and Nicaragua.

Temnothorax is a genus of ants in the subfamily Myrmicinae. It contains more than 350 species.

Wang, a Cornell University undergrad, also shared an image of an ant that is so new to researchers that it is yet to be named.

The 'undescribed Temnothorax species' is native to the area of Boca Chica where the debris fell.

'It looks like nothing else we know on this continent,' Wang wrote alongside the image of the shiny brown ant.

Oh but that's not the end of it!

He's been buying off local politicians and judges, bribing them with free teslas and campaign donations. That's how he's managed to get away with the mess he's caused so far.

But, he fucked up. Because the locals here were furious with how he's treating the environment and the news stations caught wind of it. And to save face, donated 30 million to the city.

MINNEAPOLIS POLICE

Never forget that this uprising was reignited by these young black people. That it wasn't started by Turn the Other Cheek Negroes. It was not carried over by a rich NBA athlete.

It was black undiluted rage.

It was not an idyllic peace protest that can be contained and directed. It was a series of norms that spelled out of tired activists and Anarchists directed these men and women at a target. The media is in self-congratulatory mode and has thanked everyone but these people. Without these people, the AG would not have even directed to arrest Chauvin. There wouldn't be a trial.

People want to thank the woman who filmed the murder and even technology but I assure you that these were around during Mike Brown as the media actively censored and disregarded photos of his murder. And silenced the witnesses and activists lethally or formally. It wasn't elected officials as they have still yet to fundamentally want to do anything about the police. In fact the entire prosecution has decided to go with the one bad apple defense in spite of the entire world seeing and feeling the contrary.

It wasn't a sit-in, a march, or a boycott.

It was an uprising. Never forget that.

i remember when i was figuring out if i was trans or not, it took a whole summer of me crying, going back and forth, and debating on whether or not the changes would be worth it for me to finally sit down and be like damn. i really am transgender i don't know if this will help anyone, but what i really needed was a helping hand who could tell me it was gonna be okay. it's gonna be okay.

whether or not you are trans, no matter how many times you change your name and/or pronouns, it's gonna be fine. your identity can be complex, but each step you take towards making yourself more comfortable is a step in the right direction.

idk. yesterday was a slow day and at the end of it, I still stared into a cash drawer, one of three, that had more than my rent in it, even if you only count the 20s. I spent a lot of that day trying to calculate in my head how many hours of work equal one pair of pants, let alone how many hours of work equals the fun thing I want to do next month.

I feel a cough coming on, because I work in a drug store, and all of my customers are sick. I always feel a little bit sick, now. I can't afford to eat well enough to keep my body healthy. Cough medicine is worth two hours and 20 minutes of work. Our store probably bought a case of cough medicine for they price we're selling one box. If this cough gets worse, I might have to call out, which will cost me more than the medicine in the long run- but that doesn't give me the money to buy the medicine right now. I stock a case onto the shelf. I don't buy any.

A mom wrangling three crying, sick kids enters my line and sets two types of children's medicine down, says they're both on sale and thank god for that. I ring her up, and she gets very quiet, because she misread the sign, and her total is twice as high as she was expecting. Her youngest screams in the cart, because she's burning up with fever. Her mother very quietly asks, please, she's so sorry, if I could please take the more expensive one off her total.

I agree, I move the box below the counter, and when she's not looking, I slip it into her bag. I pray as hard as I can that if she notices the "mistake" she says nothing, because I so desperately want her to have that medicine. The store has lost profit at the cost of a child's health. I don't bat an eye. This is a terminable offense. If I'm presented with the same situation tonight, I'll do it in a heartbeat.

The myth of evil employees stealing from the company falls apart the second you realize the company would shoot you dead to make a profit. This isn't two equal players, one of whom is stealing from the other. This is someone fighting for survival versus someone fighting to make an extra million. It's not equal.

Employees should be able to steal, actually.

HSTHETE IS OUR GODDESS OF MISHAPS
WHENEVER A GLASS IS SPILLED, OR THE CHICKENS BREAK LOOSE,
OR I SLEEP THROUGH ANOTHER ROOSTER CALL AND GET A SCOLDING, IT IS SAID THAT SHE IS TO BLAME.
-PTU-
THOUGH SHE TOUCHES OUR LIVES DAILY, NO ONE EVER SEES HER.
I AM LOOKING FOR HER, THOUGH.
BECAUSE I AM IN DESPERATE NEED OF A MISHAP.

SURELY SHE MUST WANT, EVERY ONCE IN A WHILE, TO BE SEEN?
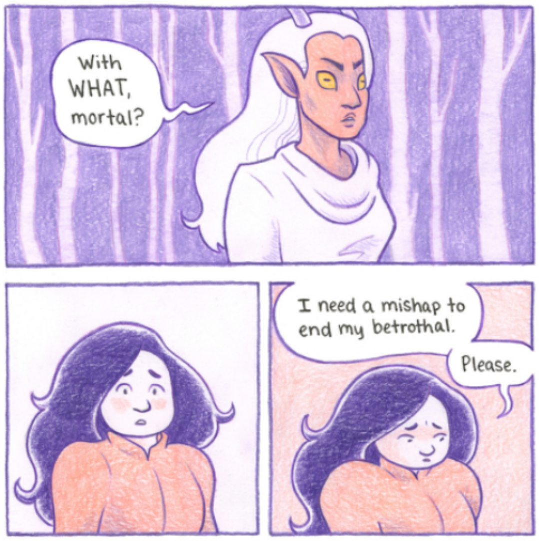
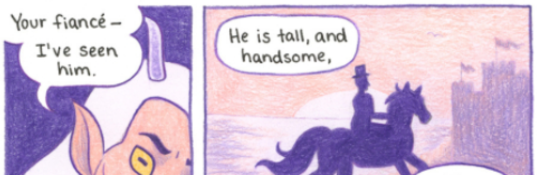
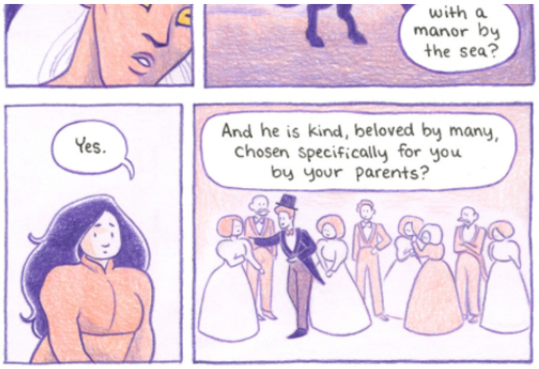
RRRIPPP
Wait–!
STOP!
PLEASE!
I NEED YOUR HELP!



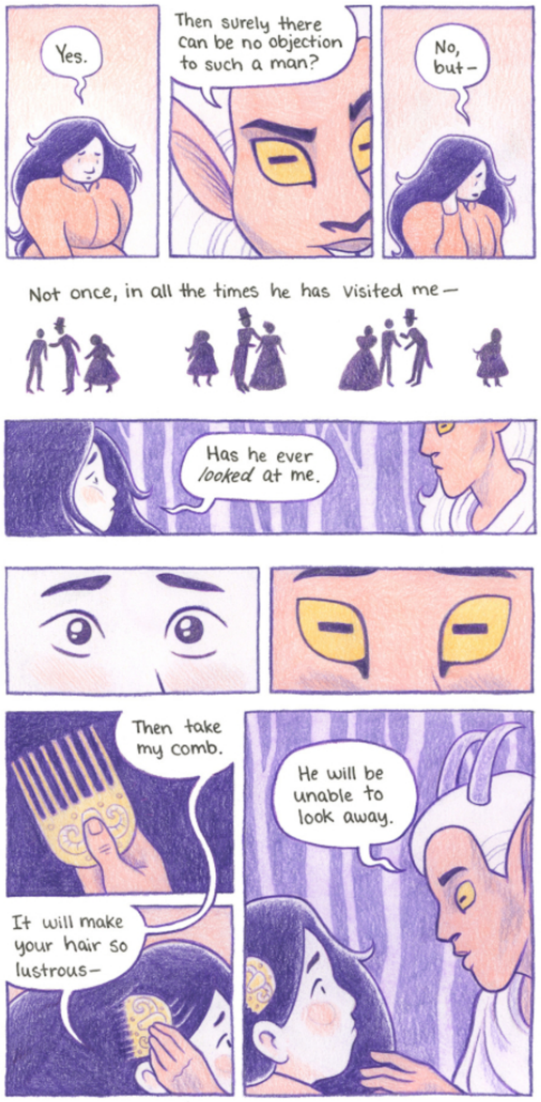
With WHAT, mortal?
I need a mishap to end my betrothal.
Please.



Your fiancé –
I've seen him.
He is tall, and handsome,



with a manor by the sea?
Yes.
And he is kind, beloved by many, chosen specifically for you by your parents?



Yes.
Then surely there can be no objection to such a man?
No, but—
Not once, in all the times he has visited me—
Has he ever looked at me.
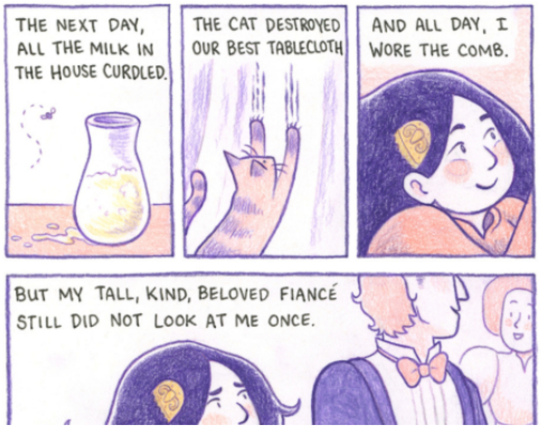
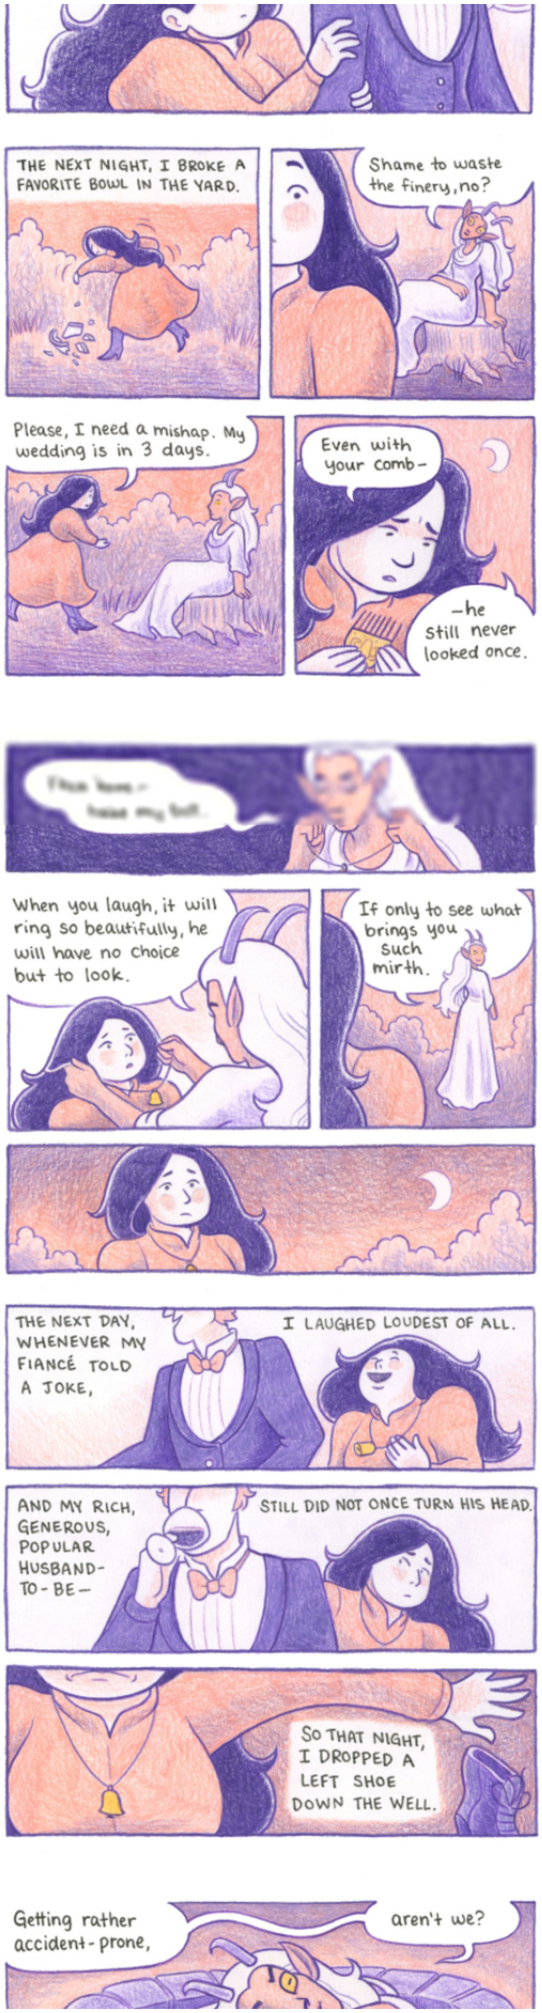
Then take my comb.
It will make your hair so lustrous—
He will be unable to look away.



THE NEXT DAY, ALL THE MILK IN THE HOUSE CURDLED.
THE CAT DESTROYED OUR BEST TABLECLOTH
AND ALL DAY, I WORE THE COMB.
BUT MY TALL, KIND, BELOVED FIANCÉ STILL DID NOT LOOK AT ME ONCE.



THE NEXT NIGHT, I BROKE A FAVORITE BOWL IN THE YARD.
Shame to waste the finery, no?
Please, I need a mishap. My wedding is in 3 days.
Even with your comb–
–he still never looked once.
Then here– take my bell.
When you laugh, it will ring so beautifully, he will have no choice but to look.
If only to see what brings you such mirth.
THE NEXT DAY, WHENEVER MY FIANCÉ TOLD A JOKE,
I LAUGHED LOUDEST OF ALL.
AND MY RICH, GENEROUS, POPULAR HUSBAND-TO-BE– STILL DID NOT ONCE TURN HIS HEAD.
SO THAT NIGHT, I DROPPED A LEFT SHOE DOWN THE WELL.
Getting rather accident-prone, aren't we?

Please, I beg you! My wedding is in two days!
And no amount of laughter will make my fiancé look at me.
I have only one thing left to give.
Take my candle.
Use it to light your way home.
And trust me.
On your wedding day, your beloved will see you.

I DID AS SHE ASKED.
BUT WITH PRECIOUS LITTLE HOPE.
UP, UP, UP!
The rooster's crowed thrice and your wedding is today.
WHAT?
A big storm is coming tomorrow, so you must be wed today.
Your fiancé already sent word he is on his way.
MY WISHED-FOR MISHAP HAD FINALLY ARRIVED.
BUT ONLY TO DOOM ME FASTER.

BUT THEN, FOR THE VERY FIRST TIME, I FELT
THE FULL FORCE
OF MY SPOUSE-TO-BE'S GAZE

LIKE THE SUN

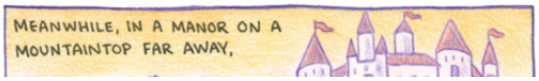
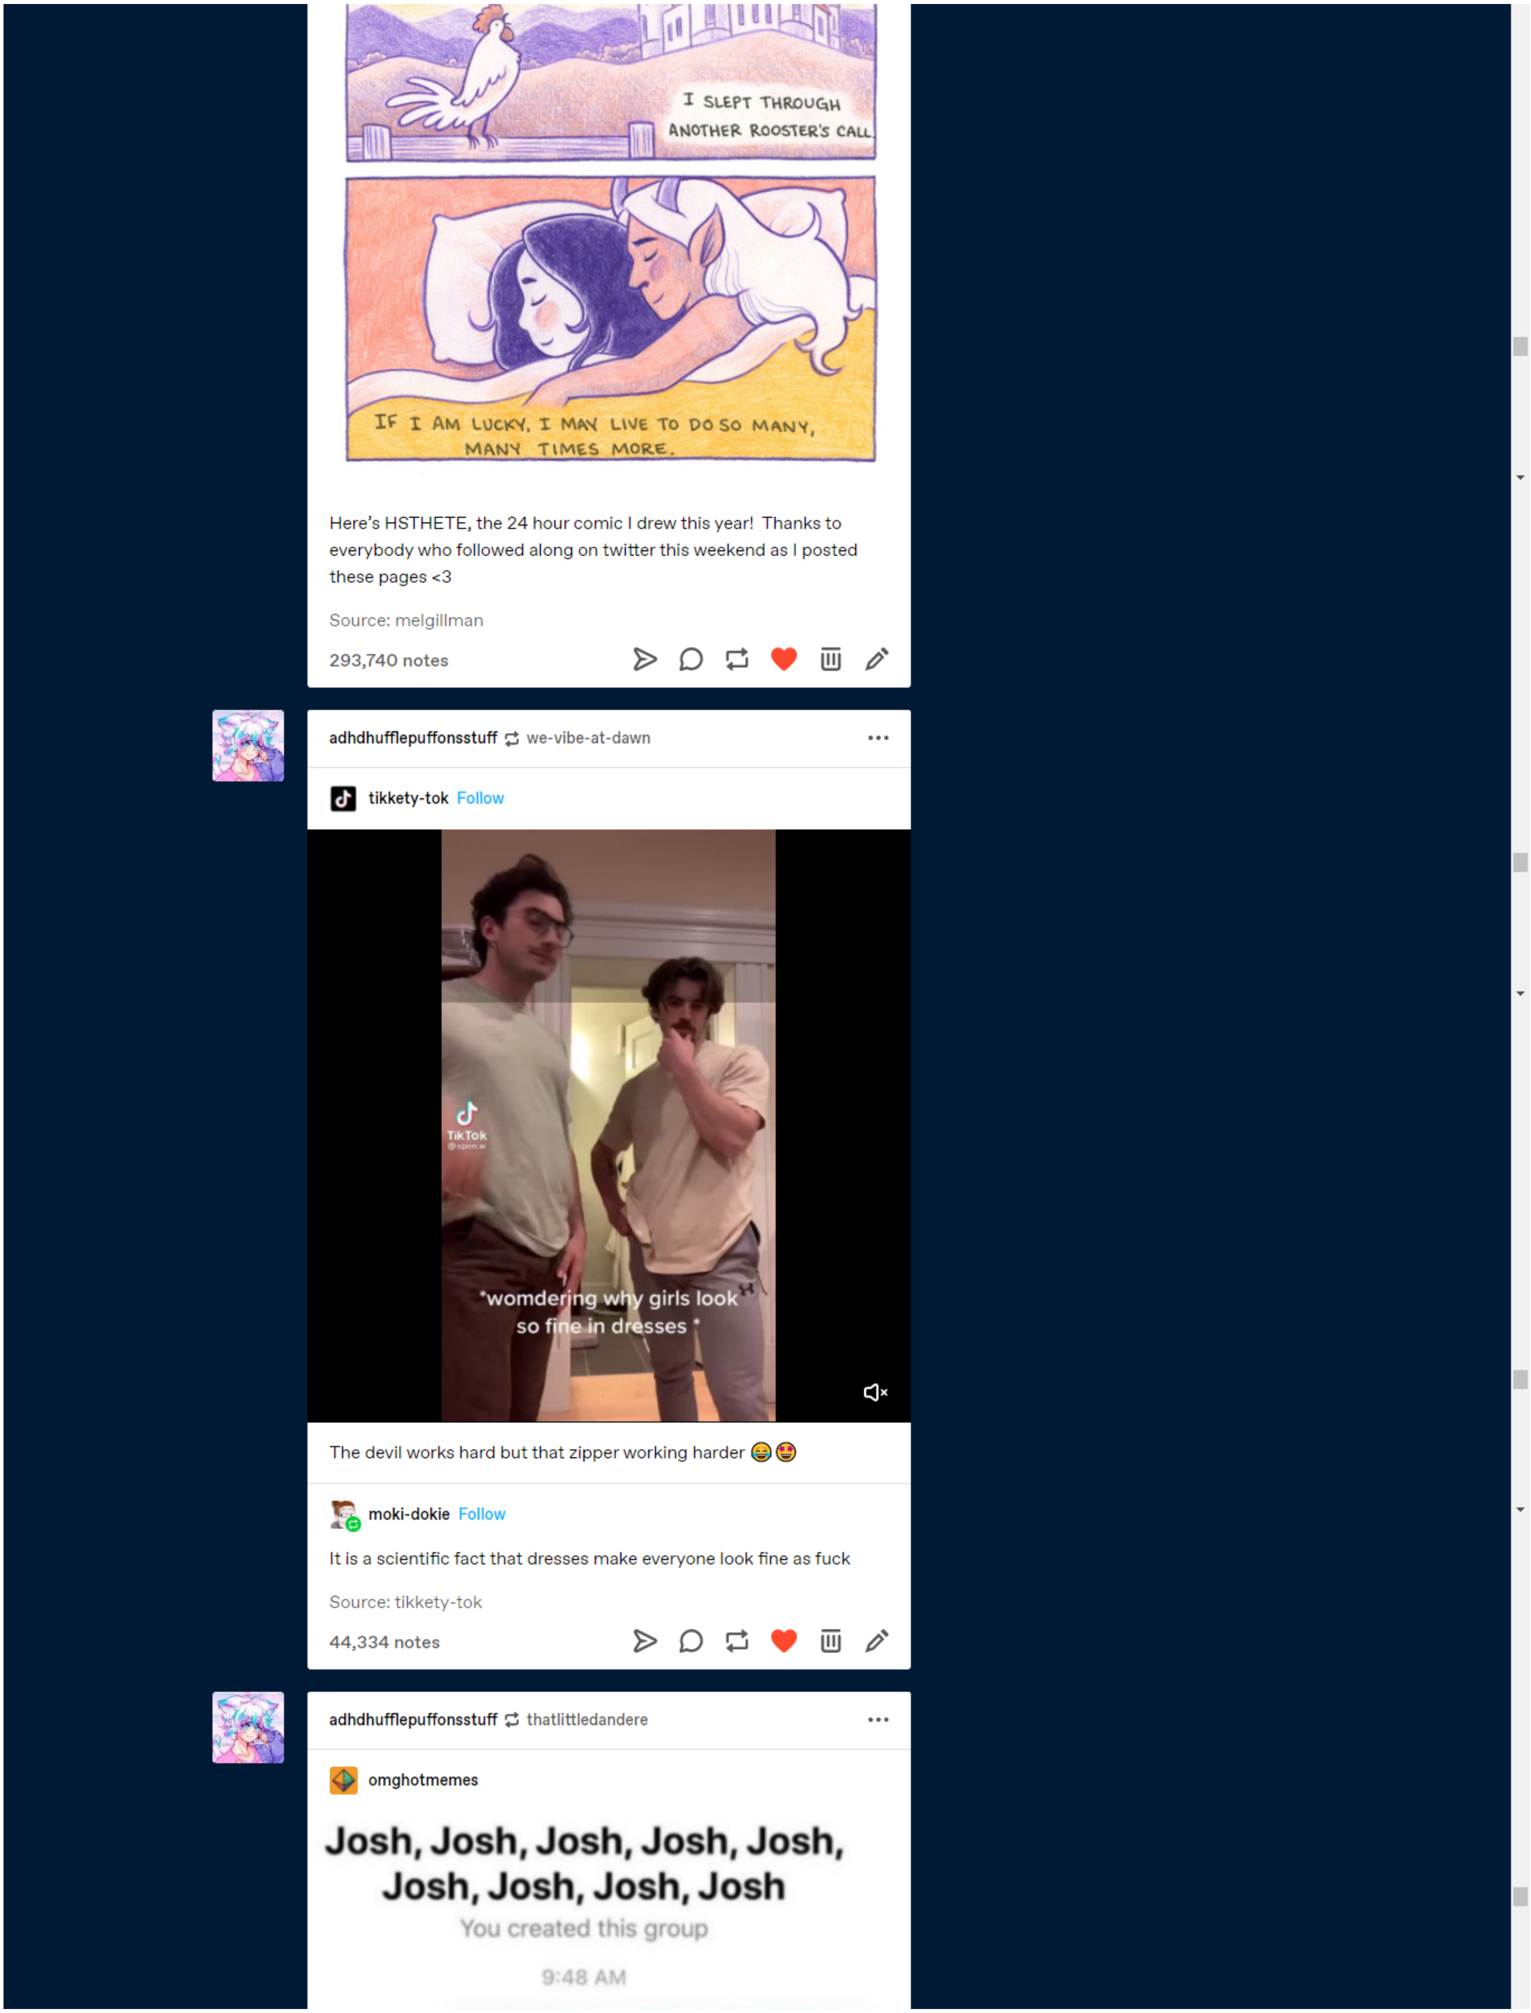
IT DID INDEED STORM THE NEXT DAY.
MY HANDSOME, RICH, POPULAR BETROTHED WAS QUITE SOAKED THROUGH
BY THE TIME HE ARRIVED AT THE CHURCH.



MEANWHILE, IN A MANOR ON A MOUNTAINTOP FAR AWAY,



I SLEPT THROUGH ANOTHER ROOSTER'S CALL.
IF I AM LUCKY, I MAY LIVE TO DO SO MANY, MANY TIMES MORE.

Here's HSTHETE, the 24 hour comic I drew this year! Thanks to everybody who followed along on twitter this weekend as I posted these pages <3

[This idea has been rattling in my brain and I had to share it.]

I know we all love the 'humans are space orcs' concept… but imagine, onboard the new ship they've been assigned to, the human meets an actual space orc. A massive monster… fangs and tusks and scars and a battle-hardened stare, looming over all the other life forms on the ship in its thick indestructible armour it refuses to remove. It barely drinks, it doesn't need sleep, its massive shoulders are heavy with the terrible things it has experienced. Compared to the squishy & delicate human body, this thing is a walking tank.

… Except instead of hating/ignoring one another, the human and the monster start bonding over both coming from death planets. The human is excited to find a life form who doesn't quiver with fear at the vague description of a jellyfish and the monster is ecstatic to meet someone who understands the feeling of being bitten by a qua'lem (cats are pretty close). They sit together and compare dangerous animals and locations as the other aliens look on in confusion and fear… oh, you also have dense jungles of deadly hidden predators, boiling acid lakes, tamed predatory killers, and areas with horrendously high and low temperatures? Sick!!

It doesn't take long before the two of them become totally inseparable. The human loves not feeling like some kind of crazy outsider and the monster is overjoyed they've finally found an equal in this unkillable marshmallow.

Monster: When I was a youngling, a grol-lik stung straight through my armour. The pain lasted for approximately 16 human hours.
Human: Oh yeah man, I get that. As a kid I got a wasp stuck in my shirt. It stung me like four times, it was awful, and all my cousins just laughed at me…
Monster: [using their arm screen to research human courting methods] I see.

"Our short-term goals are to get folks home for the holidays"

- There are more African American men incarcerated in the U.S. than the total prison populations in India, Argentina, Canada, Lebanon, Japan, Germany, Finland, Israel and England, combined.

- Ziegler, a PhD recipient now based in Oakland, explains that a July tweet proposing the app idea gained traction, inspiring him to pursue the concept in a real way.

- While Appolition.us is another towering extension of Ziegler's contributions towards aiding marginalized people, he knows it's a small step towards bringing light and hope to the trying effects mass incarceration presents.

Pelosi is out of pocket but she's also not the only white person who will do this today so this is just a reminder that murder victims don't "sacrifice" themselves. George Floyd did not choose what happened to him. He wanted to be alive. He begged for it. He was not a martyr.

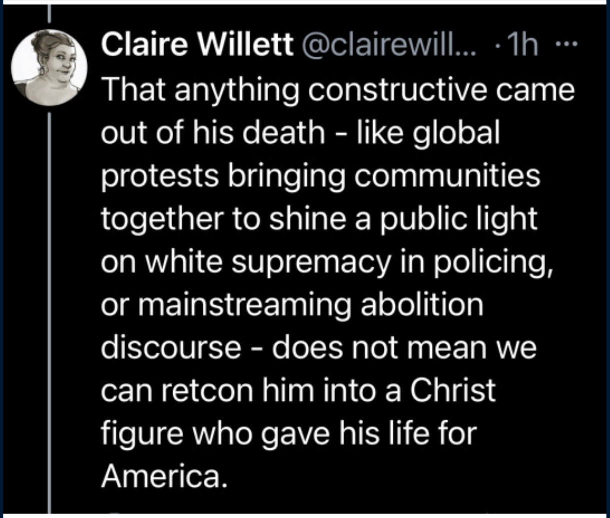
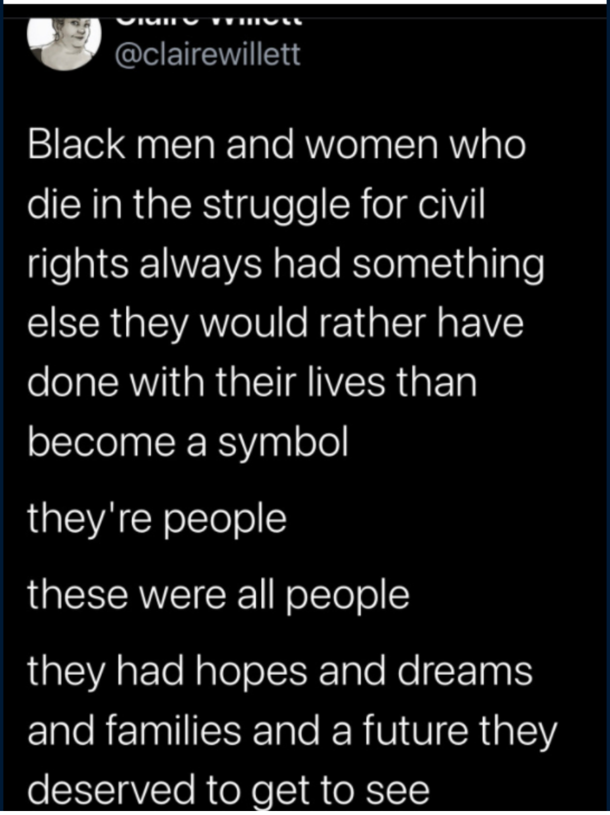
Claire Willett @clairewill... · 1h ···

Fred Hampton wanted to play for the Yankees. Dr. King was a pastor. George Floyd had a daughter he wanted to go home to. The language of sanctification can be so dehumanizing that we risk losing our sense of horror at the death of a human being who did not want to die.



Claire Willett @clairewill... · 1h ···

That anything constructive came out of his death - like global protests bringing communities together to shine a public light on white supremacy in policing, or mainstreaming abolition discourse - does not mean we can retcon him into a Christ figure who gave his life for America.



@clairewillett

Black men and women who die in the struggle for civil rights always had something else they would rather have done with their lives than become a symbol

they're people

these were all people

they had hopes and dreams and families and a future they deserved to get to see

So please, white folks, be INCREDIBLY mindful of the language you use today, because George Floyd didn't sacrifice himself for a better America, and implying that he did encourages complacency, because "at least some good came out of all this."

It was still a murder.

For vision-impaired: here's a link to the 5-Tweet thread above by Claire Willett, Apr 20. 2021.

Context: George Floyd's murderer is convicted on 3 counts. Afterwards, Nancy Pelosi makes a distraction of herself with offensively tone-deaf white-a-cism while expressing support for verdict.

I am using the time to catch up on my study of poetry.

LA FORGE: Data,
there's nothing on the screen.
That is not entirely correct.
While it is true
the display is currently blank, this... emptiness
has a poetic meaning.
Therefore, it cannot be considered "nothing" as such.

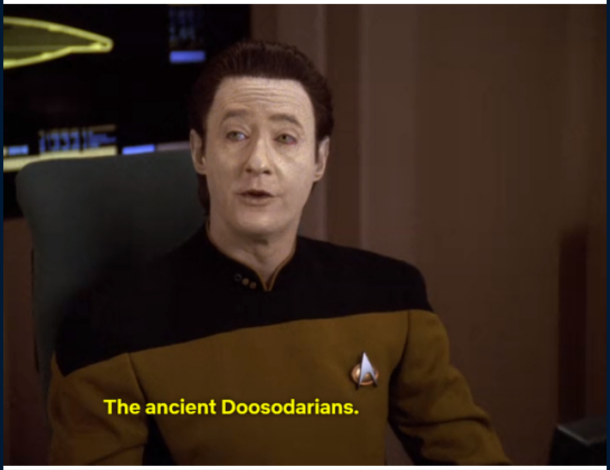
Says who?



The ancient Doosodarians.

Much of their poetry contains such "lacunae" or empty spaces.

This particular poem has a lacuna of 47 minutes.

You may experience the emptiness with me if you wish.

"you may experience the emptiness with me if you wish" is all at once 1) a very cool thing to say and 2) unbearably romantic

The fact that Data understands the artistic value of silence within a larger body of work says a great deal about him not just as a creator, but as someone who engages with the creations of others. This is a concept that's often mocked in the real world, but there's an entire piece of music based around the concept (4'33"), and any actor can tell you the incalculable value of a dramatic pause or "comedic timing".

Data is absolutely correct in his assessment that the lacunae are an important part of Doosodarian poetry. They were put into the piece for a reason, and his description of them ("you may experience the emptiness with me") also says a lot about his understanding of their culture. This isn't some random pause for shits and giggles. It has meaning and purpose within the larger body of the poem, and Data is actively engaging with the lacuna to determine what it means, which is the mark of not just an interested reader, but quite a skilled one.

reminder that george floyd wasn't a martyr who sacrificed his life for the betterment of white people he didn't choose to die. he didn't sacrifice himself. he was murdered in cold blood white people are already twisting this, thanking him for his sacrifice like he decided to be brutally murdered by a white cop for existing as a black man like. stop thanking him for being killed just because it made you open your eyes! it was never his responsibilty to make you take a stand against police violence and racial profiling in the first place you want to make something out of his death? acknowledge that it was senseless and never should have happened in the first place! stop glorifying this murder

And how much that means we need diversity more than uniformity

nonblack people hush. this is not your "history being made". this is not your victory. i know children who attend MY school who were brutalized by police YESTERDAY and thus the battle continues. black people are still being oppressed and affected by generations of trauma, so seeing you rejoice in a sliver of accountability from a system that functions to fuel mass incarceration of our people offers no joy, solace or solidarity. continue to amplify OUR voices and OUR activism keeping our people alive, safe and thriving rather than trying to claim progress over our corpses

Btw, the arm soreness after vaccination is a combination of the needle going into the muscle, the muscle fibers being slightly stretched by the injection of fluid between them, and then the inflammation of the immune system realizing something foreign is in the arm and getting ticked off about it (this is good, it's the beginning of your immune response!).

Doctors recommend you keep the arm moving to keep blood flowing which can help reduce soreness. Ice packs also help!

Ma'Khia Bryant, a 15 year old Black girl, was fucking murdered by a cop in Columbus, Ohio, after calling the police for help because she was being jumped by another group of teenage girls, she had a knife on her that she had for self-defense and the fucker rolled up and shot her 4 times, apparently without telling her to drop the knife according to bystanders, and this happened roughly 20 minutes before Chauvin's verdict in court for the murder of George Floyd
